LOCAL ISSUES BETTER

GOVERNMENT FUNDS GO AHEAD

The accumulation of week-end orders on the Dublin Stock Exchange was of quite good dimensions yesterday, and markets presented a busy appearance. Local issues were mainly in good demand, and a hardening tendency developed. British securities also gained ground.

There was again a good business passing in Home Government Funds, and 5 per cent. Conversion Loan advanced 15/- to 107½, while 4½ per cent. Land Bonds improved to 112, and 4 p.c. Land Bonds rose to 103¾. British Funds displayed strength and 3½ per cent. War Loan closed 6/3 higher at 105.

Bray 3¼ per cent., on recent inquiry, sputted 13 points to 85.

Guinness Ord. receded 5/- to 53/6. Dublin Distillers were still a shade better on the day; the Ord., however, eased to 4/- in a small way. Grand Canal Pref., and they gained 2/- at 85/-. Rails were busier, but Great Northern (Guaranteed lost a point at 36.

Tram Pref. drooped to 22/-.

Alliance Glass Ord. met with further nervous liquidation, and shed a few pence at 19/3. Todd Burns Pref. tended higher, but Cement Ord. fell away to 27/6.

The feature of British Industrials was the strength of Tobaccos. Imperials jumped 1/6 to 92/6, and B.A.T. Ord. were called several pence higher at 88/3. Coats Ord. were around 28/7½, and Courtaulds Ord. hardened to 30/11½.

LONDON

CHEERFUL TONE ALL-ROUND

SMALL VOLUME OF BUSINESS

News of the Naval battle gave a fresh fillip to the London Stock markets when trading was resumed yesterday, and the improvement in sentiment was emphasised by the announcement that Dirdawa has been occupied by British forces. At the same time, Budget uncertainty held business in check, and, although cheerfulness prevailed in all sections, actual turnover was disappointingly small.

Initial trading in Gilt-Edged Securities witnessed fresh buying on a fairly active scale, but final quotations were not materially changed. Old War Loan, Old Consols, and other favourites all finished unaltered. Exceptionally, Consols 4 per Cent. concluded ⅛ up at 111¾.

In the Foreign market, Greek Sevens continued to make headway, and demand was in evidence for Japanese 6 per Cent. Egyptian Unified also attracted buyers, and improved to 82.

British Rails again found a place in the limelight, and, in contrast to Gilts, the market displayed a rising trend throughout the day. Great Western 5 per cent. Pref. gained no less than 1½ to 85. Several other prior charges also showed to advantage, whilst L.M.S. Ord. and Southern Preferred improved afresh to 13¾ and 50½ respectively. Forfar Railway were noteworthy for firmness of B.A. and Pacific Debentures.

There was little improvement in general activity in Industrials, but increased attention was directed to a variety of the principal issues, and the resultant advance in values caused a more cheerful tendency to spread throughout the market. Tobaccos put up another encouraging "limp," both 74d. higher at 89/1 and 93/1½ respectively, and Carreras "A" up to 73/9.

VICKERS' GOOD

In the Stores group, Woolworths hardened to 47/3, whilst Marks and Spencer gained a trifle to 33/1½. In the Steel section Vickers showed up well at 14/7½, following the accounts; and among Motors, buyers were about for Morris at 26/7½.

Breweries revealed little of interest, and, after a promising start, Rayons eased off. Courtaulds closing a shade lower at 30/6. In other directions, Dunlops were in good demand up to 33/7½, and gains were shown by Chemicals, Turner and Newall, Triplex, and Cable Ord.

The Kaffir market was very quiet for most of the day, and, with such business as there was, directed to the dividend-payers, Crown Mines recovered further to 12s. and "Sallies" were in Cape demand at 88/9. Just before the end demand appeared for the developing mines, and Blyvoors rose to 11/9, and Western Reefs jumped to 26/6 in the last few minutes. West Africans and Rhodesians were little changed.

Oils continued cheerful, without showing much activity. Among the leaders, "Shells," Burmahs, and Anglo-Iranians were all unaltered. Exceptionally, Consols 4 per Cent. and other favourites all finished rather sellers at 26/8.

Trinidad issue, developed renewed firmness, with Leaseholds supported up to 66/3 and T.P.D.'s at 52/6.

EMERGENCY REVENUES

Increasing Sterling Assets

A CENTRAL RESEARCH BANK?

BY A STUDENT OF ECONOMICS.

SINCE the Banking Commission's reports were issued about four years ago, there have been marked changes in trade relationships between Eire and the outer world; changes which have already gone far, and seem destined to go much further, to call for a fresh review of the financial and economic structure as it was then presented and examined.

One of the basic factors which have led to such changes—the depreciation of the £1 sterling—was commented upon in the Irish Times of the 21st instant. Now something may be said about the intimately inter-dependent influences of changes in the quantities and relative values of our exports and imports.

The extent to which such changes have occured, their bearing on movements of apital between Eire and the outer world, and their possible reactions on our economic life, may conveniently be approached by setting out a few important figures taken from recent issues of the official returns of Trade Satistics issued by the Department of Industry and Commerce. From a summary of these monthly returns we find the following somewhat startling variations as between the first two months of this and last year:

TOTALS FOR JANUARY AND FEBRUARY

IMPORTS.

Two months,	1940	£8,774,000
" "	1941	5,263,000
Decrease		£3,511,000

EXPORTS.

Two months,	1940	£4,507,000
" "	1941	3,933,000
Decrease		£1,574,000

Thus despite recent drastic reductions o livestock exports owing to foot-and-mouth disease, we find that the twemonths' proportionate decrease in our otal exports was considerably less tha in our imports.

SWING OF TRADE BALANCES

Consquent upon such changes betwee export and import values, which ave been specially marked since the midle of last year, there has been a shar reversal, of trade relationships under hich (mainly owing to Eire's policy f excluding imports) our external sets were materially reduced during he past five or six years. The relevar figures show:—

"ADVERSE" TRADE BALANCES.

Janua and February, 1940	£4,267,000
" " 1941	1,330,000
ariation	£2,937,000

The corresponding figures for the first si the second six months of last year we:—

Janua to June	£12,846,000
July December	1,970,000
ariation	£10,876,000

From whatever point of view such figures may be approached—whether by opponents of "orthodox" finance like the signatories to the Banking Commission's majority report, or by advocates of self-sufficiency and "managed" currencies—they justify certain indisputable reflections. One is that our external investments substantially increased last year as the result of emergency restrictions. Another is that such investments will continue to increase in proportion to the degree in which we can maintain, or increase, our flow of exports and restrict—or fail to secure corresponding increases in the values of our imports. (Thus, the irony that the epidemic of foot-and-mouth disease operates directly to restrict increases in our external investments!)

EXPORTS OF CAPITAL

However such figures may be explained, interpreted or manipulated, there an be no question of their significance. Whether Eire's actual adverse balances of trade (when all allowances had been made for "invisible" exports and imports) were £21 million or £10 million annually during recent years, present balances are now, and promise for some time to remain substantially "favourable." Which is to say that month by month there is the prospect that Eire's "capital" will continue to be exported and to accumulate in some forms of "foreign" securities.

Whatever may be the form of such securities—be they "gilt edged" or speculative—it seems to be highly probable, if not indeed inevitable, that they will mainly be realisable in terms of sterling values. Consequently—as was indicated in the contribution of the 21st instant—as the £1 sterling continues to depreciate the result must be a corresponding fall in the value of our nominally increasing external assets.

A BUSINESS MAN'S REMEDY?

While all such figures and their implications convey nothing that is unfamiliar to economists and financial experts, their significance has yet, one fears, to be appreciated in business and certain political circles. Discussing the subject recently with a prominent business man, whose advice carries considerable weight in public affairs, one found that the problems presented him with little difficulty. His prescription was—"Bring the money home now!" When it was pointed out that there are many obstacles to such a transfer of securities, and that—in any case—there are no ready-made means for the employment of more millions in Eire, his answer was—"Put the notes in the Bank of Ireland to finance farmers and factory-owners and public works, and to prevent increases in rates and taxes."

ADEQUATE CURRENCY

But then—was there any need for more bank notes? If so, could they not be printed at once by the Currency Commission? No—that would mean inflation, a fall in the purchasing power of the Irish £1 note! At that point we parted—the writer puzzled to understand why notes printed by the Currency Commission would cause inflation while their equivalents brought back from London would be tangible and reproductive assets!

So the problem remains. We must strive to maintain or increase our exports if the farmer is to survive and pay his rates and annuities. But, whether for reasons of force majeure, or for those of sentimental "self-sufficiency," imports must be prohibited or restricted—with the inevitable result that Eire's money will continue to flow into, and remain in, the coffers and enterprises of other communities!

Yet, is the dilemma quite so complete? Given time, goodwill, skill and energy, are there not safe ways out of what seems for the moment to be an economic cul de sac? The answer, of course, is that "money"—like water—has the knack of finding its own level! Dammed up its vagaries may be disastrous!

CENTRAL BANK BILL

From such speculations we are soon to be called on to hear of one means by which the Government proposes to grapple with certain currency and money problems. Mr. de Valera's announcement that proposals for the creation of a "Central Bank" will soon be placed before the Oireachtas has caused surprisingly little public interest. Yet, be the coming proposals revolutionary or—as is more likely—framed on the cautious plan outlined by the Banking Commission, there is the prospect that the occasion will be seized to discuss, and to dogmatise on, other and wider aspects of Eire's economic structure.

FINANCE AND RESEARCH

Meanwhile two brief extracts from the Banking Commission's view of a Central Bank (of which more anon) may not be out of context with some of the foregoing reflections. "The Commission," says paragraph 366 of the Majority Report, "recommends that the monetary authority (i.e., the Central Bank) should develop a research department fully equipped for its task." What task? "To tender advice to the Governments in such matters as have a monetary bearing"; and "to call attention to the monetary aspects of proposals made and measures taken."

Proposals which seem to suggest some identification of the present industrial research bodies with banking operations. Some hope that industrial policy and activities will cease depend on the vagaries of bank directorates and the impulses of political groups. Then, and not until then, some of our "expatriated" capital may begin quietly and naturally to find its own level at home!

"PRIVATE LIVES" AT THE PEACOCK THEATRE

Mr. Stanley Illsley and Mr. Leo McCabe are again presenting Noel Coward's domestic comedy, "Private Lives," at the Peacock Theatre this week. There is only one change in the original cast. Miss Shelah Richards having gone to keep an engagement at the Gaiety, the part of Amanda is taken by Miss Moya Devlin. Stanley Illsley again plays the part of the amorous but temperamental Elyot; Leo McCabe is Victor Prynne; Joan Plunkett takes the part of Sibyl, Elyot's jilted wife, and Mairin Hayes is the French maid. Some Noel Coward melodies are sung by Peggy Dell, and production is by Stanley Illsley.

Mr. J. B. Priestley does not wish to become a member of Parliament. Interviewed, in Reading, yesterday, concerning Mr. A. P. Herbert's offer, made in his Sunday broadcast postscript, to support Mr. Priestley's election, he said that in that case he would be "just another M.P."

LETTERS TO THE EDITOR

THE FUEL SHORTAGE

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES.

SIR,—The various schemes for an increased output of turf, however excellent they may be, will not produce any results for some months to come. The Slieveardagh coal mine will also probably take some time to come into action. In the meantime, there is an urgent need for fuel for the poorer families in Dublin and the large towns.

There are, and around Dublin, a large number f trees, representing a two or three onths' fuel supply for hundreds, if n thousands, of families. Some of these e on large estates, but the majority in ones and twos in small gardens. They are, undoubtedly, pleasant to th ye and a decided civic amenity. Bu this is an emergency, and considera of æsthetics must take second pl. Furthermore, many of these trees are actually doing damage to property, through being planted too close to walls, which are being underm l by their roots.

It does no appear impossible to arrange a sch e under which trees would be cut down by unemployed workers, who ould then have a right to the wood. here are a few obviously necessary conditions. The consent of the Departme t of Agriculture to the cutting down o the trees must be obtained, the cutting should be done under expert upervision, the workers must underta to put the place in order after r ing the wood, some arrangements m be made for storage and, not least important, one or more trees must be planted for every tree cut down.

If the above conditions are fulfilled, the consent of property owners would, I imagine, in most cases be easily obtained. If so, the public would have a right to ask why.—Yours, etc.,

G. F. DALTON.

FIRST AID

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES.

SIR,—Perhaps you will allow me to draw attention a matter of some importance and gency in relation to the training of first aid personnel which is proceeding throughout the country and at considerable expense. I may lay claim to some experience of the practice of first-aid in war conditions and also the training of civilian workers and the practical instruction of those already trained, or at least, in possession of some form of certificate of proficiency in first-aid. It is my belief that "we have reached the stage when we marshal our facts and court-martial our fictions."

The facts are that if the object of first-aid instruction is to train men and women to carry out efficiently the duties which they may be called upon to perform, rather than merely to thrust upon them by the thousand certificates of proficiency in first-aid when in fact they possess no such proficiency, then the system of instruction is wrong. I may be unfortunate, but my experience is that a very large number of persons who possess all the documentary evidence of qualification in first-aid could not be fully trusted, for example, to control hæmorrhage, or to apply artificial respiration adequately and for a sufficient length of time. This as a rule is not the fault of the trainees. It is the fault of the system of instruction which unhappily is too prevalent. The classes are far too large, and the medical instructor contents himself, far too frequently (indeed so far as I can ascertain, almost invariably) with verbal repetition of facts which every member of the class can read in the handbooks, and practical demonstrations are left entirely to others. These latter demonstrations may be excellent, but it is apparently impossible to make any serious attempt to ensure that every individual is fully capable of carrying out the details in practice.

Unless effective steps are taken in this direction, training is illusory, and the money spent upon it is largely wasted.—Yours, etc.,

"M.D."

SELF-SACRIFICE

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES.

SIR,—Some time ago when heavy taxation and general financial conditions considerably reduced most people's income, a certain retired Army officer found himself unable to continue the employment he had formerly given. Having gone into his affairs very thoroughly, he called together his servants, indoor and outdoor, and explained to them his position. He frankly stated the former amount of his income and the reduction now made in it. He explained his liabilities, and put it to his employés that, in order to pay his way, there were two courses open to him. Either he must reduce his establishment or, if they agreed to his proposal, he could keep them all in his employment but at a reduced rate of pay.

He gave them the assurance that he and his wife would also have much less now to spend on personal requirements and his promise that if, and when, conditions improved, he would restore to them their present wages. He asked them to consider what he had said and to give him a reply at the end of a week.

Before the day was out they came to say that they had unanimously agreed to their master's proposal. They accepted a lower rate of pay and none of them had to join the ranks of the unemployed.

I do not know what the trade unionists would say to this transaction, but to me it seems logical and fair.—Yours, etc.,

J. SHORT.

FLOUR FOR PIGS

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES

SIR,—I herewith give you a report on a conversation I heard between two farmers in a shop in Westport to-day. Farmer No. 1 had some pigs in at the market for sale. Apparently these were not in the condition necessary to command the best price, so he would not sell, and was taking them back home again to fatten them up.

Farmer No. 1 was telling Farmer No 2 all about it, and was regretting that he had not accepted the price, that would have meant about 10s. per cwt. loss to him, as he did not have the necessary feeding-stuffs for fattening them and that it was not obtainable. Farmer No. 2, in so many words, told him not to be silly, but to buy a bag of flour, which, mixed through the potatoes, etc., would fatten the pigs as well, if not better, than anything else. Farmer No. 1 appreciated the advice of No. 2 and straight away purchased a bag of flour.

Farmer No. 2 had quite obviously used flour for the fattening of pigs, and, if flour is used to any extent for this purpose one can readily imagine the effect it will have on the supplies available for human consumption. These supplies, we are being warned every day, are far below normal.

In my opinion, this practice of feeding flour to pigs should be brought to the notice of those in authority without delay. No doubt you will be able to do so very forcibly in one of your editorials or by getting in touch directly with those whose business it is.—Yours, etc.,

D. BOYD.

"STRAYED" DOGS

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES.

SIR,—A few weeks ago a well-bred West Highland bitch, utterly exhausted, was picked up in the streets of Dun Laoghaire. Advertisements in the Irish Times and in the Evening Mail, and visits to the Dogs' Home and to the Castle have failed to discover the owner, and we are forced to think that the terrier was deliberately "strayed."

I would be grateful if you would publish this letter to allow me to make a double appeal. First to owners who are unable or unwilling to maintain their dogs to give them a quick and merciful end. Veterinary surgeons will do this for a small fee, especially in the case of owners with small means, and I think the animals' dispensaries will do it free. I do not think that those who "stray" dogs have any idea of the physical suffering, and still more the fear and mental anguish, of a dog thus abandoned.

My second appeal is to breeders not to give away or sell at temptingly low prices their surplus bitch pups to people who do not realise the trouble they are bound to entail from time to time. Too often the trouble and responsibility are ultimately shirked in the thoughtless cruelty of "straying."—Yours, etc.,

P. A. PALMER.

"FIAT LUX"

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES.

SIR,—In your issue of yesterday a striking advertisement appeared warning the public of the necessity of reducing lighting and heating in order to conserve supplies of fuel. The notice was cut out of the paper and placed on the office notice board so that the staff, already loyally co-operating in saving light and fuel, might realise the gravity of the position, and, therefore, might not relax their self-sacrificing zeal for the common good.

You may, therefore, judge of my amazement, Sir, when last evening I observed the street lighting on many of the principal thoroughfares of our city in full operation, notwithstanding the thoughtful provision already made by proprietors of countless shops in the form of neon signs and window lighting and other decorative forms of luminous advertisement which made the ordinary street lighting fade into obscurity.

When will our City Fathers wake up to the problem of waste and eliminate unnecessary street lighting, with consequent saving to the ratepayers? We ought to be very grateful to those citizens who are so generously prepared to provide us with free public lighting!

I am thinking of removing the advertisement from the office notice board!—Yours, etc.,

J. C. WILKINSON.

LABOUR AND THE "DOLE"

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES.

SIR,—I venture to make the following suggestion which may help to lighten the burden of the poor and be of benefit to the country in general.

All money distributed as dole, etc., should be earned in proportion to the amount given. Hence it seems fair to suggest that if the average rate of pay of a labouring man is 50s. per week, and an unemployed man gets one-third of this amount, then he should be prepared to work one week in every three weeks or the equivalent of such in one week, and the fruit of his labour could be distributed between the deserving or given to the St. Vincent de Paul. Where there are many such men getting this free money they could work in relays, so that there would be a continuous supply of labour which can be utilised in many different ways—to cut turf and cultivate the land, etc. This work to be carried out under the supervision of Parish Councils or some such capable body.—Yours, etc.,

D. MACDONALD.

PETROL AND FOOD SUPPLY

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES

SIR,—I run a commercial glass-house (about 12,000 square feet) 36 miles from Dublin, and annually produce a large quantity of tomatoes. The latter require in the summer months nearly 20,000 gallons of water per week, all of which has to be pumped by a petrol engine. Despite numerous applications to the Ministry of Supplies, I am given only four gallons of petrol per month, which is totally inadequate for the purpose. Yet, we are asked to grow more food! This year, in view of a possible shortage, I grew (with difficulty owing to lack of water) 8,000 heads of indoor lettuce, and sent a consignment in last week (by rail owing to lack of road transport) to one of the most reputable salesmen in Dublin. For this I received 1s. 3d. per dozen! Out of that must come commission and rail both ways on crates. Yet, retailers are charging up to 6½d. per head for similar lettuce. Had I petrol to deliver my own produce I might be able to sell it at 1½d. per head, but freight charges make this impossible.

In view of these facts, it would be just as good to feed my lettuce to the cattle—a poor encouragement for one who is trying to "grow more food."—Yours, etc.,

F. H. LANGAN.

"GREAT PROPHECIES ABOUT THE WAR"

TO THE EDITOR OF THE IRISH TIMES.

SIR,—With reference to your review of the bove work, may I recall that in 1915 the late Father Thurston, S.J., published a little volume entitled "The War and the Prophets"? In it he showed conclusively that the Prophecies of St. Malachy are a XVI. century forgery, and that a prophecy ascribed to the Curé d'Ars (presumably the one referred to in your review) was current after the war of 1870-1, and again early in the Great War, and had no better foundation than what an anonymous lay-brother told his congregation that the Curé d'Ars had foretold a dozen years before. (The Curé died in 1859.)—Yours, etc.,

INSURANCE INSTITUTE OF IRELAND

Regret that the attitude of the Irish Medical Union prevented a Dublin eye specialist from giving a lecture to the Insurance Institute of Ireland was expressed by the outgoing President of the Institute, Mr. A. E. O'Callaghan, at its annual meeting in Dublin last night. No other professional body in this country had ever adopted a similar attitude, and larger and more representative medical organisations in neighbouring territories placed no obstacles in the way of lectures being given by the most eminent medical practitioners to sister institutes.

The report of the Council, presented by Messrs. R. G. Knaggs and F. V. Hilton (hon. secretaries) showed that membership of the Institute had increased from 453 to 541 during the year. Arrangements had been made with the City of Dublin Vocational Education Committee for classes in certain branches of insurance business, and it was hoped to extend these facilities to cover other branches in the near future.

The meeting passed a vote of thanks to Mr G. J. T. Clampett and the City of Dublin Vocational Education Committee for their assistance in connection with the classes and the Chartered Insurance Institute examinations.

The new President, Mr. Hugh Mooney (London and Lancashire) was formally installed. Other officers elected were:—Deputy President—Mr. C. H. Molloy (Motor Union). Vice-Presidents—Messrs. J. H. Aylward, E. Bain, G. W. Blackham, Senator J. Brennan, R. W. Jameson, G. F. Joyce, J. Montgomery, A. E. O'Callaghan and M. W. O'Reilly. The hon. secretaries (Messrs. R. G. Knaggs and F. V. Hilton), hon. treasurers (Messrs. J. Cullen and C. Brownlee), hon. librarian (Mr. J. Wilson), and hon auditors (Messrs. J. A. Haughton and W. H. Daly) were re-elected.

U.C.D. NOTES

MUSICAL SOCIETY'S ACHIEVEMENT

BY OUR CORRESPONDENT.

THE concert given by the Musical Society on Wednesday was an even greater achievement than that of last term. The thanks and congratulations of an audience which must have numbered at least three hundred are due in full measure to Dr. Larchet, who has worked ceaselessly since the beginning of the term, training the orchestra, choir and soloists. His conducting was very clear and careful, and he obtained splendid results notably in Hardebeck's arrangement of Cailleach Mhór Chrón na Gaibhle, for choir, where the rhythm was delightful and the singing finely disciplined. The outstanding work, however, was the Grieg A minor Concerto, where there was an extremely nice balance between the orchestra and the pianoforte. Miss Maire Larchet was the soloist, and she played magnificently, bringing out the abundant melody firmly, yet gracefully, while technically her playing was admirable. Without being at all "patronising," it is quite true to say that she is highly promising. There were one or two minor blemishes on the part of the orchestra—for example, the rough treatment given by the 'cellos to the exquisite third theme of the first movement—but, these details excepted, the performance was of the very first order. Phaudrig Crohoore, with which the concert ended, is a rollicking affair, and the choir took it at a grand pace. The effect was exhilarating, and it was probably the best effort yet of the choir. Miss O Cadhlaigh sang two traditional Irish songs. Her voice is a soft, pure one, full of natural beauty, and she sings with an ease and sureness which seems almost effortless. As an encore she sang an unaccompanied song, and in all three there was not a false note or a mistake in tone or pitch, though her time was occasionally erratic. Mr. Michael Murtagh played two 'cello soli pleasantly, and the orchestra ran through the Rosamunde Overture very efficiently and with considerable spirit. Altogether a most enjoyable evening, for which, again, our sincere thanks to Dr. Larchet.

MISS MAIRE LARCHET.

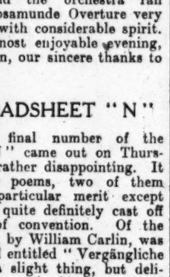
THE BROADSHEET "N"

The term's final number of the broadsheet "N" came out on Thursday, and was rather disappointing. It contained four poems, two of them without any particular merit except that they had quite definitely cast off the shackles of convention. Of the other two, one, by William Carlin, was in German, and entitled "Vergängliche Lust." It is a slight thing, but delicate and well conceived, the spirit of the seasons being nicely expressed. Niall Lawlor and John Hoey contribute "Ultimatum," which is good, and is definitely distinguishable from the ruck. Its sentiment is, however, unreal, and it is quite clear that the statement, "we have gained a little faith," is more likely to be an over-statement than an under-statement.

EXAMINATIONS

Last week a number of examinations were held in College in Medicine, Dentistry, Engineering and Commerce. There is one result posted so far—that of the Third Medical (Part I.), in which Miss Cecilia M. Stafford Johnson got first place and first class honours. There were nine second class honours—Messrs. Gordon C. Butler, Richard Curtin, James O. Doyle, James D. Burke, Richard Marx, Maurice C. Treacy, Miss Nuala W. Gilmore, and Messrs. Michael J. Kelly and Martin W. Rafter, ex æquo. Last week, too, were held the inaugurals of the Natural History Club (on Tuesday) and the Law Society (on Thursday). Both of these meetings were well attended.

The production of "Winterset" has already been mentioned in these Notes, but there was not space then to refer to more than two members of the cast. Of the rest, Mr. Jack Hoey, as the broken old Judge Gaunt, gave what was probably his best performance on the stage so far. His acting has improved greatly, its range being considerably extended, while his actions have lost much of the rigidity that rather marred them in the past. Mr. Oliver Murray was, to most people, something of a revelation in the part of Garth, such strides has he made since previous appearances. He should now aim at greater flexibility in his speech and gesture. Mr. Aodhan O'Brien Moran was given a splendid opportunity, coming on to the stage soused in blood and with, as he told us, three slugs in his stomach. He certainly did the thing in style. Mr. Dennis Hoey and Mr. Alec Hinkson had difficult parts, which they managed well. Some uncomplimentary things have been said about Fred. May's incidental music. Most of them are unfair, as even the occasional lapses into garishness were never out of keeping with the temper of the play, while the rest of the score was quite attractive and remarkably well played by a small orchestra, in which the oboe was outstanding. With none of this are the promoters of the play satisfied, as they seek only approbation for the play itself and for their judgment in selecting it. They are dismayed to find men and women who think Mr. Anderson boring and unoriginal, somewhat sordid, and a defeatist. With all their modernity they have proclaimed their devotion to a fashion of thought which, these five years now, has given way to something more deep, more full of hope—something almost Christian in its outlook.



MR. J. HOEY.

DIOCESAN SECONDARY SCHOOL FOR GIRLS

A display of gymnastics, folk dancing and skipping was given by the girls of the K.G. pupils of the Diocesan Secondary School for Girls, Adelaide road, Dublin.

At the close of the display, the Rev. E. Greening, M.A., distributed the awards and badges and congratulated Miss Jones, of the Ling Institute, for the interesting and varied programme, and for the splendid work done by the girls.

The manager's prizes for the best all-round work were awarded to Emily Anderson and Muriel Evans.

After the display the visitors had an opportunity of viewing an interesting show of work done by the pupils of the drawing classes.

FOOT AND MOUTH DISEASE

WARNING TO FARMERS AND STOCK OWNERS

The position regarding Foot and Mouth disease has now become so serious as to be a matter of GRAVE NATIONAL CONCERN.

In their own interests, and to stop further dislocation of the live stock industry, farmers should do all in their power to assist the Department of Agriculture in stamping out the disease.

Farmers can help the Department in the following ways:—

(1) By reporting at once any suspicious symptoms to the nearest Garda barracks.

(2) By keeping away from other herds and by instructing their employees to do likewise.

(3) By keeping other persons away from their herds and lands.

It has now been established that in most of the recent outbreaks infection has been spread through personal contacts.

SYMPTOMS OF THE DISEASE

The first symptoms are lameness or slavering at the mouth. In affected cattle, salivation is generally accompanied by a smacking or sucking sound—a very characteristic symptom of the disease.

Sudden lameness in cattle, sheep or pigs should arouse strong suspicion.

The State will pay full compensation for all animals which have to be destroyed on account of the disease, but the Minister for Agriculture has power to refuse payment, and will not hesitate to do so, in any case where the existence of the disease is concealed.

FAILURE TO REPORT THE EXISTENCE OF THE DISEASE WITH ALL PRACTICABLE SPEED IS AN OFFENCE INVOLVING HEAVY PENALTIES.

Issued by the Department of Agriculture.

OLYMPIA THEATRE

"A SNAPPY ROAD SHOW"

Music predominates in "A Snappy Road Show" at the Olympia Theatre this week, but comedy and dancing vary the programme, and the big attraction is found in Phil Murtagh and his Band, with Peggy Dell. This company of accomplished players have the second part of the bill to themselves, and last night they put a great amount of work into their selections, which included vocal solos and duets.

Sam Mooney, baritone; Vie Kaye, soprano; and Norma Barry, soubrette, were delightful in their singing in "Musical Comedies of the Past," and Martin Crosbie, tenor, was repeatedly recalled. Jack Molloy was a fine accordeon player.

Bert Lena, Noel Fitzpatrick and Paddy Kenny appeared in two comedy sketches, "Slum Town" and "Money Lent," arousing considerable laughter by the Dublin atmosphere that they introduced, characteristic of the theme of their titles. The Olympia Girls were smart and graceful in their dances and marches, and rhythmic in their movements.

QUEEN'S THEATRE

"Broadway to Connemara" has been retained for a third week at the Queen's Theatre. The show has some bright comedy, pleasant singing and colourful dancing—the dancing outstanding in the ballet based on the legend of the Children of Lir. The cast includes Eire O'Reilly, Harry Bailey, Jimmy Harvey, Liam O'Connor, W. J. Hobbs, Patty Ryan, Mick Eustace, the Cadwell Troup of Irish Dancers, the Queen's Moonbeams, and the Emerald Girls' Pipe Band.

YOU'VE NEVER HAD A SHAVE LIKE this BEFORE

Coro-Shave is such an improvement over old-fashioned methods. It does away with soap and brush. All you do is to spread Coro-Shave on your face and shave. It's done so quickly—and what a shave! You see, Coro-Shave helps the razor to cut clean through the hairs—not into them. And how delightfully soft and smooth your face feels after Coro-Shave. Try it for a few days and see the difference!

THE POPLIN INDUSTRY

The silk-weaving industry existed in Dublin in the fourteenth century, and was centred around Francis street and Meath street, said Miss A. M. Barrett, M.A., in a lecture on "The Poplin Industry in Dublin," which she delivered at a meeting of the Old Dublin Society last night. Outlining the history of the industry, she said that the Guild of Weavers was the Guild of the Blessed Virgin Mary, and had as its chaplin a Carmelite priest. The industry declined in the nineteenth century, and in the present century, but was still in evidence in the city.

America and the "Axis"

After the outbreak of war between Great Britain and Germany a number of German ships took sanctuary in American harbours. As Norway and Denmark, France and Italy became successively embroiled, ships of those nations added themselves to the list of refugees. The international law on the subject—if, indeed, any exists—is not clear; but it is, apparently, the American doctrine that belligerent vessels which thus claim refuge in neutral waters have a right to it, but also have certain duties towards their host, one of which is that the vessels must be kept in order. During the past few days officials of the United States Government, acting upon orders from Washington, have seized a substantial number of Italian and Danish, together with two German, vessels lying in American harbours, on the plea that "the crews of certain of them intended to sabotage" their ships, thereby endangering the harbours themselves. As we write, 28 Italian, two German and more than 40 Danish ships, amounting to a total of approximately 300,000 tons, have been seized, while a rumour is in circulation to the effect that French ships also will be taken into "protective custody," and that the magnificent trans-Atlantic liner, Normandie, will be one of the victims. It is said that in certain cases there was ample evidence of intended sabotage, while the engine-room of one vessel already had received severe damage, and two others have been set on fire. The United States has not yet revealed her intentions in regard to these vessels. They have been put in charge of American maintenance parties, and their own crews have been put ashore under custody; but the title remains with their owners, and so far there has been no attempt to confiscate them. Naturally, the "Axis" Powers will not accept such treatment without protest. Italian comment, though unofficial, declares the United States' behaviour to be "unjustified," and it is believed that the German and Italian Embassies in Washington are "assembling data" for a vigorous protest to President Roosevelt. In fact, the ships are of no value to either nation, since they cannot leave port without the consent of the United States, and, even if that consent were forthcoming, they would find it no easy task to slip home without an encounter with the British Navy. On the other hand, it is by no means impossible that the United States will find a use for the seized vessels in a capacity in which they will be of the greatest disservice to their original owners.

The strong possibility is that they will be handed over to Great Britain as part of the American programme of "all aid short of war." Great Britain, as everybody knows, stands in dire need of merchant shipping, in order to carry the huge stocks of war material with which the United States is preparing to supply her. Thus far President Roosevelt is not prepared to let ships from his own country enter the war zone; but a large part of the "lease and lend" programme will be ineffective unless the British obtain some hundreds of thousands of additional tonnage. America, of course, is willing to build ships for her; but, even at the fastest rate, vessels cannot be built in a day or two, and Britain's needs are dangerously urgent. The question is: will the German and Italian Governments regard the seizure and transfer of their own vessels as an act of war—and, if so, what will the Americans do about it? All the odds seem to be that the Americans will pay no attention to any protests whatsoever, and will tell the "Axis" Powers to declare war if they please. The attitude of the United States Government during the past week or two has been completely defiant. President Roosevelt no longer talks of "aggressor nations": he names Germany and Italy. "We Americans," he declared in his broadcast last Saturday, "have announced our determination that with all our resources and all our power we shall help those who block the dictators in their march towards domination of the world." When the leader of a great nation holds and expresses such views, the fiction of that nation's neutrality is very thin: America may not be at war with the "Axis" Powers in the sense that her armed forces have not come into collision with those of the "Axis" Powers, but she is at war with them in a very real and deadly sense. She is determined that, so far as lies in her power, Great Britain shall not "go under," and we have no doubt that, if the transfer of ships which belong either to the "Axis" or to countries under "Axis" domination can be of benefit to Britain, to Britain they will go. Mr. Churchill is not likely to decline the gift; he will find abundant use for all the shipping that he can get, wherever it may have been constructed. He hardly will worry himself about the diplomatic niceties. The war is far too real and earnest for any refinements of procedure: only the procedure that helps to victory is allowed to matter.

In the Mediterranean

When the story of the present war comes to be written one of its most remarkable chapters, from the point of view of human interest, will deal with the part that is being played by Italy. Economically, Italy is by far the weakest of the so-called "Great Powers." She is dangerously short of raw materials of every kind, particularly of coal; and her industry depends almost entirely on imports. For that reason, it was felt, when Signor Mussolini decided to enter the war on Germany's side, that, although France was hors de combat, the Duce was undertaking a grave risk. On the other hand, while most of the military experts took the view that the Italian Army hardly was up to modern requirements, having suffered fairly heavily in Abyssinia and in Spain, the naval men were almost unanimous in their respect for the Italian Fleet. For the last seven years Signor Mussolini had been preparing his navy for the inevitable clash with Great Britain. He had built up a large establishment of the most modern vessels, concentrating mainly on speed; and, when the war broke out, the British and French authorities reckoned that their combined forces in the Mediterranean would be necessary to contain the Italian Fleet. When Signor Mussolini declared war Paris already had fallen, and the campaign on the Western front was virtually over. The French Fleet ceased to be a factor in Mediterranean warfare, with the result that those portions of the British Navy that could be spared from the Atlantic, the North Sea, and the Far East were forced to face the Italians single-handed. On the map, Signor Mussolini's fleet seemed to have substantial advantages, apart altogether from the question of size. By the fortification of Pantellaria, between Malta and the African coast, the Italians seemed almost to have closed the Sicilian Channel to British shipping. It looked as if Malta itself could not be held by the British; and there were many British sympathisers who took the view that the Admiralty would be well advised to write off the Mediterranean as a dead loss, and to concentrate all its efforts on the defence of Great Britain against a possible German invasion. In the event, the naval results of the last seven months have taken everybody by surprise. The most sanguine believers in the efficiency of the British Navy hardly could have anticipated the apparent ease with which it has established supremacy in the Mediterranean. Even with the assistance of German dive bombers, operating from Sicily, Signor Mussolini's fleet has been unable to make any appreciable impression on the British forces under the twin command of Sir Andrew Cunningham and Sir James Somerville.

Any real damage that has been done to the British naval forces in the Mediterranean has been done by German "Stukas." The first big engagement was the British raid on Taranto, when units of the Fleet Air Arm wrought havoc among some of Italy's finest warships. The British also shelled Valona with impunity; they made reconnaissance "sweeps" right into the Adriatic, and Admiral Somerville's command steamed up to Genoa, which was bombarded heavily. Furthermore, the British Fleet gave the most invaluable assistance to General Wavell's Army of the Nile during the campaign in the Western Desert. From Sidi Barrani to Benghazi, it shelled every Italian stronghold along the coast, meeting with no opposition of any kind from the sea. The sole occasion on which substantial losses were sustained was when German dive bombers attacked a convoy passing through the Sicilian Channel. H.M.S. Southampton was lost, and the aircraft carrier, Illustrious, suffered a number of direct hits. The latest Mediterranean battle, details of which we print to-day, seems to have been the most convincing naval victory of recent times. It was the biggest naval encounter since Jutland, resulting, according to the British Admiralty's bulletin, in the utter rout of the Italians. With the exception of a few aeroplanes, which are missing, the British say that they suffered no losses, whereas they claim to have sunk at least three Italian cruisers—Fiume, Pola, and Zara of ten thousand tons apiece—and two, if not three, destroyers. The British Commander-in-Chief also declares that a 35,000-ton Italian battleship of the Vittorio class—probably the famous Vittorio Veneto—was damaged severely. Three of Great Britain's capital ships—the Warspite, Barham, and Valiant, all armed with fifteen-inch guns—were in action. The destroyer Havoc, which took part in the raid on the Narvik fjord almost a year ago, also was present, and seems to have lived up to her name and reputation. If the British claims are accurate, the Italian Navy hardly can hope to play much further part in the Mediterranean war; and it is difficult to understand why such a formidable force should have acquitted itself so poorly. Italy's intervention in the war would appear to have been a tragic blunder. In Albania, in Libya, and in East Africa her forces have been fighting a losing battle almost from the start. Her Air Force has done nothing to justify its high repute, and her Navy has been equally ineffective. The truth seems to be that Italy was not sufficiently prepared for a prolonged campaign on land, on sea, and in the air against the British; and she had not the industrial or financial resources to enable her to improvise, as the British were able to improvise after Dunkirk. Nobody who knows the Italian people or their history will gloat over their discomfiture; but war is a relentless taskmaster, who never condones a mistake.

That's the Stuff

The British Army, it appears, is determined to have music wherever it goes. Last week a present from Canada arrived in Britain for the troops. The present—which came as the result of a series of communications between Miss Caroline Haslett, chairman of the British Federation of Business and Professional Women's Clubs, and the Canadian branch of the same club—consisted of a motley collection of what might be called musical instruments, although many people will, no doubt, feel that the word "musical" is a slight over-statement. The instruments number over 500; most of them are mouth-organs, but some flutes, a jews' harp, a bird whistle and a concertina are included. It might be mentioned en passant that it is quite possible that the greater part of these instruments—which are a desirable adjunct to Britain's war effort—were manufactured in Germany. That fact, however, is hardly likely to detract from the value of the present. When it was announced a short time ago that the British Army had formed a symphony orchestra, we welcomed the idea; but we were, at the same time, a trifle dubious about it. We have no such doubts with regard to the consignment of mouth-organs. Here, we feel, is the right thing, the traditional thing; this, so to speak, is the stuff to give the troops. How much easier it is to picture a crowd of soldiers sitting around a camp fire—or the modern equivalent of a camp fire—playing the latest songs on their mouth-organs than to picture the same crowd sitting in hushed groups playing, or listening to, a Beethoven symphony. No doubt, the latter state of affairs would be desirable; but it would also be unnatural. From a purely practical point of view the mouth-organ, as a mode of musical expression for the use of the soldier, has the distinct advantage over the symphony orchestra. The mouth-organ is to the symphony orchestra what the portable typewriter is to the large printing press. The scope of the mouth-organ is somewhat limited; but what it lacks in sterling worth it makes up in adaptability, and that is what the soldier wants. We venture to say that the mouth-organ is the musical instrument par excellence for the soldier. We do not take, perhaps, so elevated a view of the instrument as Kipling and Service; it must be admitted that the mouth-organ is not entirely without blemish, even in its own sphere. It has, for example, an amazing propensity for collecting more than its fair share of dust and germs—especially when kept in the pocket—and it is apt to get out of tune after a short time. However, no thoroughgoing soldier would worry about these little trifles, and the mouth-organ remains the ideal instrument for any Army.

Anglo-French Incident

"Only Food Carried" Assertion

PRESS ASSOCIATION.
VICHY, Monday.

THE Ministry of the Navy today issued a communique in answer to the British Admiralty's communique of yesterday in connection with the French convoy incident off the Algerian coast.

"The British Admiralty's communiqué of March 30, it is declared, "endeavours to explain the aggression at Nemours by the reason that the French convoy was believed to be transporting important war materials destined for Germany.

"The French Ministry of the Navy formally denies this.

"The French convoy was transporting 15,000 tons of rice, 1,500 tons of dried vegetables and 7,000 tons of barley.

"There was neither rubber nor war material, nor foodstuffs, intended for the enemies of Britain."

The British communiqué explained that "reports had been received . . . that the convoy carried important war material for Germany."

The French Government has lodged a protest against the alleged British attack on the convoy, according to the German radio. The protest was made through the American Embassy in Vichy, it was added.

The communiqué adds that Mr. Eden and General Dill "resumed their conversations with the Greek Government with the aim of preventing the extension of the war in the Balkans."

THE HOME GUARD IN NORTHERN IRELAND

It is announced in London that the British Government has decided that in the interests of efficiency and convenience the Northern Ireland Home Guard shall continue as a branch of the Constabulary Force, under the control of the Northern Ireland Government, until it might be necessary for the military authorities to assume control.

The Northern Ireland Government, while willing to facilitate the assumption of military control, made it plain that they would help the British Government. Now that a decision has been reached they will do all in their power to make the force ready and efficient.

LONDON LETTER

LESS IRISH SEED POTATOES

59 FLEET STREET, LONDON,
MONDAY NIGHT.

THERE is no general shortage of seed potatoes in Britain, but supplies of certain varieties are insufficient to meet requirements. Some of the growers in the South of England who have used Irish seed for many years with satisfactory results are planting other seed this year, as the shipments from Irish ports which were made in former years have not been made. The earlier varieties are less plentiful than the main crop, and many growers are now using descriptions of seed that they have not planted before; but they are regarded as being abundant croppers, and there should be no shortage of yield.

Mayfair Goes

London's Mayfair had altered greatly from old times before the war, and now the change is even more marked. Members of the aristocracy who lived there have left for cheaper quarters in many cases, while hundreds are engaged in occupations requiring attendance elsewhere. Some of the dignified houses have been destroyed, others are flats or homes for bombed people, while staffs of Government officials are in possession of quite a number. These great places require too great an expenditure and too many servants to keep them going, and the prospect is that Mayfair after the war will be no longer a purely residential area, but a flourishing business quarter. There are already signs that this will come about, since many City firms have migrated to West End addresses.

Chain Stores Go

Under the British Government's concentration scheme for retail traders it is proposed to leave it to the owners of the shops to take steps to close down branches which for various reasons may be considered redundant, and compulsion will be introduced only should such a course become necessary. Many of the chain stores will be closed particularly where competing establishments exist in the same neighbourhood. In many cases the competing branches are within a few yards of each other, and it is hoped that by mutual agreement on the give-and-take principle it will be possible for one of the two branches to be closed. Quite apart from any compulsion from the Government, such a course would probably have been adopted on account of reduced supplies of goods under the orders of the Board of Trade limiting supplies, while the question of finding sufficient staff is also a matter which has a direct bearing on the situation. Every day more girls are leaving the stores.

Imperial Council

Viscount Elibank, in the House of Lords, will ask for the formation of an Imperial Council, to consist of the Prime Ministers of the United Kingdom and of Northern Ireland, and of the Dominions and Southern Rhodesia, or their representatives, together with representatives of India, the Colonies and Protectorates. The motion embodying the request defines the function of such a Council as co-ordination of action upon a major question of imperial policy. Lord Davies has put down a suggestion, not for debate, however, that United States residents in, or visiting, Britain shall for the duration of the war be given the status of British citizens.

Rubber Uses

The rubber-growing industry has always been concerned about the fluctuations in the demand which occur every year, and this makes the industry rather vulnerable. Much research has been devoted to widening the use of the commodity, one of the latest being to make plates used for printing out of the material instead of an alloy of lead, tin and antimony. The United States has pioneered this development, and a two hundred thousand copy edition of a new novel has just been run off in half the usual time taken with metal plates. Complete plate changes were made in ten minutes with the new rubber plates, and twenty-five per cent. less ink was used. Both natural and synthetic rubber were used, but the latter was slightly more satisfactory.

No Idle Land

The British Ministry of Agriculture is determined that all possible use shall be made of private grounds and gardens for the production of food, and it is sending inspectors to visit country houses to see what use is being made of suitable land. It is desired that every garden capable of production shall grow vegetables, and kitchen gardens are being surveyed to ascertain if they are well kept, while lawns and flower beds also come under review, to show what percentage of the ground is being profitably employed. It has been found that there is still much idle land that can be used for food production, and this is to be changed.

IRISHMAN'S DIARY

"The Spanish Soldier"

Louis D'Alton is not, I think, the first Irishman to have plays running simultaneously in Dublin and New York; but after what Denis Johnston said at the Irish Book Fair on our need for more dramatists it is good to see this young actor-playwright winning success both in Ireland and America.

I must confess that in the American title, "Tanyard Street," I could scarcely recognise "The Spanish Soldier," but I have certainly been interested in how American critics react to it.

Joseph Wood Krutch, who is by no means easy to please, thinks it "is not really a very good play, at least for American audiences," but says that he followed it with a good deal more interest than seemed to him wholly explicable at the time. "I recommend it," he adds, "at least to those whose prejudice is favourable, rather than unfavourable, to the Irish school."

For that he gives much of the credit to what he describes as the good work of Barry Fitzgerald, Arthur Shields and Aideen O'Connor.

The Stage Irishman

"But it isn't all the acting," he hastens to acknowledge; and here he subjects this play and "the making of the stage Irishman, as the Abbey conceives him," to an acute analysis well worth the study of both Irish writers and Irish directors. Louis D'Alton, he goes on, "has obviously picked up some useful hints from the works of other Abbey playwrights, and he proves again that the Irish, at least as seen by Irish playwrights, are good dramatic subjects for a reason which also suggests why the English seem such bad ones in most contemporary English plays.

"To be too persistently concerned with good form and too afraid of any emphasis except that of understatement is likely to make one a rather dull protagonist. Your well-bred Englishman doesn't like to make a scene, but scenes are necessary to make a play. And that is where your stage Irishman comes in. He loves high talk and he loves a scene. Abbey plays are usually interesting, partly because everybody in them is so interested and so willing to show it."

After that pat on the back, let us see Broadway take to pieces the Irish genre of which "even rather inferior specimens so often manage to be flavoursome and interesting."

Types

Krutch declares that "the characters of an Irish play have become almost as standardised as those of the commedia del arte. There are usually three men and three women. First, there is the virile young man who distrusts priests and has an eye for the girls; second, the intense young man with a mystical turn and a love of his country; third, Mr. Barry Fitzgerald, a comic rapscallion well along in years. The three women are, respectively, a soubrette to flirt with the first man, an intense young girl to love the second, and, finally, a hard-working wife to support the third. Any others who may be introduced for the sake of variety are strictly minor, and do not have much to do with the plot."

Krutch has never been closer to Ireland than the harbour of Cobh, but his seems to be a contribution to the discussion on what is wrong with the Abbey. Has he disclosed the formula of what our young playwrights ought to avoid?

Domestic Interlude

Dining with friends the other night, I was somewhat surprised when my old acquaintance, Mr. X.—pillar of the Civil Service—rose at 9.30, explaining that he still had his homework to do. Immediately the conversation launched into an enthusiastic discussion on the academic merits and de-merits of those present, thus revealing to the uninitiated that "doing homework" is de rigeur among the proud parents of Dublin.

One man's forte was Irish. He proudly boasted 88 per cent. in a recent test. A rival countered with third place in "maths."—and loudly complained that he had been robbed of a certain "first" because his homework was not given in on the previous Tuesday owing to his son's indisposition!

A third well-known citizen confided that the "Engaged" notice on his office door more frequently shielded his struggles with elementary Latin than with affairs of state.

Beside me was a newly-wed solicitor. I congratulated him upon freedom from this kind of tyranny.

Smiling ruefully, he explained that in his courting days he, too, had been drawn into the "homework racket," and had been persuaded to "do" French for his prospective brother-in-law whilst the lad's father wrestled with Euclid. Marriage has in no way lessened his obligations, and he now has to travel nightly between the two homes in order to maintain the success of the team.

The burning question is—did he, in the first instance, "do" the homework to get his wife or did his wife get him to "do" the homework?

"Gave the Winner"

The canny racing tipster (writes a sporting correspondent) is careful to mention several possible winners, so that, when the race has been decided, he may be able to claim, "I referred to that one's chances."

Already we are hearing claims about the Newmarket correspondents of some journals having "tipped" Gloaming, the winner of the Lincolnshire Handicap. As there were only two Newmarket horses in the race—and the Newmarket correspondents were concerned with their own horses—it was not a very striking thing for them to have mentioned the winner.

QUIDNUNC.

25 YEARS AGO

From the Irish Times, April 1, 1916.

Policy after the War.

Sir William Lever, speaking yesterday at Port Sunlight, said that the question of national policy after the war could only be answered by the complete evacuation of Germany from all conquered territories, the surrender of every German colony, and all enemy shipping interned in neutral ports, payment by the Germans of full indemnity, and every security against the possibility of a recurrence of war. There could be no peace until these ends were achieved. But when the war ended all bitterness must end.

A Cowardly Cry.

The cry of special tariffs against Germany was a cowardly cry, worthy only of a backward race of people. The timid and nervous policy of tariffs and restrictions against former enemies would only operate in stimulating false imperialism, founded on injustice and disregard for the rights of others. There was no case for Germany to pay indemnities to all the nations she had injured. She could only pay in goods. Germany would need raw materials, and would come to the British Empire for them. If we refused to trade, she would go to Scandinavia, whose shipping trade would be stimulated at the expense of our own.

FRENCH SHIPS IN U.S. TO BE SEIZED?

70 AXIS VESSELS UNDER ARREST

Mr. Roosevelt Gave The Order

THE United States Government may seize fifteen French ships, including the liner Normandie, now lying in American ports, says a Washington cable this morning, quoting "well-informed circles" there.

Treasury officials intimated that action was possible later this week.

President Roosevelt yesterday said that he personally had ordered the seizure of Italian, German and Danish ships, totalling 296,745 tons. These include 28 Italian (168,775 tons), 39 or 40 Danish (118,853 tons) and two German vessels (9,087 tons).

The President refused to comment on his action, but Mr. Cordell Hull, Secretary for State, said that while he would not undertake to talk at present about the final disposition of the ships, he had not heard anyone question the absolute legality of the seizure, and emphasised that justification for it was based on the fact that attempted sabotage in the ships endangered American ports.

The German vessel Eisenach and the Italian vessel Fella which took refuge at Punta Arenas, were yesterday set on fire by their crews, says an Associated Press message from San Jose, Costa Rica. The Fella was a 6,072-ton passenger liner and the Eisenach a 4,177-ton freighter.

POSSIBLE AID TO BRITAIN

Asked whether the seizure could be construed as a step towards war, Mr. Hull said that the United States Government for some time had been pursuing a course of aid to Britain and other nations under the formula of all available aid short of war.

"That is the formula followed so far," Mr. Hull added.

Mr. Hull could not say whether the United States formally would notify the German, Italian and Danish Governments of the action.

Nevertheless, it was learned, says the Associated Press, that the German and Italian Embassies had been assembling data on which they expected to base vigorous protests.

"PRE-ARRANGED PLAN"

Italo Verrando, general manager of the Italian shipping line in the United States, said in New York yesterday that the seizure of Italian ships in the United States was in accordance with a pre-arranged plan which had been "in the offing" for some time.

Verrondo declined a full statement, but added:—"All the ships were supposed to be seized by the United States Government for use as planned. Everybody knew that."

The Rome authorities have withheld comment on the American seizure of

The French Liner, Normandie.

Italian ships, but Rome radio, quoted by Associated Press, declared that the act was "unjustified."

A Reuter message from New York, reporting that the police there have completed a list of the eight French ships in harbour, including the Normandie, says that there is no indication whether this action is connected with the seizure of Axis ships.

FRENCH SHIP MOVES

The French freighter Ile d'Ouessant, which had been tied up in Hudson River since the beginning of the war, yesterday sailed several miles down the river, across New York Harbour to Staten Island.

Marine authorities said that the Ile d'Ouessant, a vessel of 6,187 tons, would take on oil at Staten Island and sail for Norfolk, Virginia, to pick up coal. They declared that the State Department and Britain had agreed that she might trade between the French West Indies, Island of Martinique and the United States.

Officials in Washington are now studying the final disposal of the seized ships, which at present remain in "protective custody," the title still remaining with the original owners. The ships, as announced yesterday, were seized following the receipt of information about sabotage by Italian crews.

It is very probable, says the Press Association, that the ships will be placed in service in view of Britain's need for ships and the general shortage of shipping.

It is learned from Boston that 16 German and 27 Italian seamen there refused to go to bed on Sunday night and refused breakfast yesterday morning following the seizure of one German, one Italian and four Danish ships at the port by coastguards.

DANES AT MANILA

The U.S. Navy has taken into "protective custody" four Danish ships, aggregating 23,800 tons, in Philippine waters. Admiral Hart, the Commander-in-Chief of the U.S. Asiatic Fleet, said that the action was to prevent sabotage by the crews.

The Normandie has been docked at Pier 88, Hudson River, New York, since September, 1939, but her captain, Alfred Zanger, stated recently that "she could sail at any time." There have been rumours of sabotage, mutiny and starvation aboard, which were denied by Captain Zanger, says the Associated Press. A French-speaking maintenance crew of 115 have kept the ship and her 160,000 horse-power engines in perfect condition, he said. In September, 1940, neither the French line nor Captain Zanger would comment on reports that 90 per cent. of the original maintenance crew of 130 had deserted to join General de Gaulle's volunteer forces in Canada.

ON ELLIS ISLAND

Italian and German crews are held at the immigration quarters on Ellis Island, but Danish sailors are being asked to remain at the coastguard headquarters on Ellis Island. Axis diplomats are angry, says the Associated Press, over the better quarters given to the Danes.

Icelandic ships were not seized, presumably because England occupies Iceland.

Earlier reports from New York yesterday said that evidence of committed and attempted acts of damage was found by armed United States marines and coastguard men who boarded some of the vessels.

The United States Naval Intelligence Division learned on Saturday of a concerted attempt at sabotage in at least twenty Italian ships, and on Sunday night it was announced from Washington that evidence of sabotage had been revealed in Danish ships.

The German ships Arauca and Pauline Friederich (a tanker of 4,733 tons) were at first boarded as a protective measure, but both were later taken into custody.

1918 LAW

The U.S. authorities have acted under the provisions of a law dating back to the war of 1914-18 authorising coastguard authorities to assume custody of foreign ships and remove their crews should the captain permit wilful damage to his vessel.

It also provides that any ships actually sabotaged may be declared forfeited to the United States.

It is emphasised that the United States action does not constitute confiscation, but a step to prevent a widespread campaign of destruction on Italian ships.

MAY GO HOME

The crews of the Axis ships—between 1,000 and 1,500 men—have been put ashore, and it was stated unofficially in Washington that the United States Government will probably take care of the Italian crews. They will be sent back to Italy, if possible.

The Italian vessels taken into custody were mostly average-sized freighters, totalling about 175,000 tons.

Of the Danish ships taken over fifteen are in New York harbour, eight at Baltimore (Maryland), three at Boston, two each at Philadelphia, Norfolk (Virginia), Jacksonville (Florida), and Los Angeles, and one each at Portland (Maine) and Gray's Harbour (Washington).

The U.S. port captain who led the boarding parties said: "We had no trouble, because we made it clear we meant business."

At Houston (Texas) the crew of 29 off the Italian ship, Mongioia, were arrested by Coastguard men.

At Portland, Captain Polonio, of the motor ship, Leme (8,059 tons), described the seizure of his vessel as an "act of war."

CATTLE PLAGUE STILL SPREADING

EFFECT ON DUBLIN'S MEAT SUPPLY

The spread of the foot-and-mouth disease continues. According to an official announcement issued last night fresh outbreaks have been confirmed at Fairview Strand, Clontarf, Dublin, and at Powerstown, Mulhuddert, Co. Dublin.

At Fairview Strand ten milch cows, the property of Mr. Hugh Carroll, were found to be affected, and at Powerstown, Mulhuddert, five bullocks of a herd of seventy, the property of Mrs. A. C. Keogh, were reported to have been suffering.

Thirteen cows on the lands of Mr. William Masterson, where an outbreak was confirmed on Sunday, have contracted the disease.

The Royal Dublin Society has been informed that the Department of Agriculture, at the request of Louth Committee of Agriculture, have cancelled the proposed sale of pedigree bulls at Dundalk on the 8th April.

DUBLIN'S MEAT SUPPLY

At a meeting of the Advisory Committee for Dublin emergency meat supply, held yesterday, the Minister for Agriculture presided, and there were present:—Messrs. Patrick Barry and John Bruton, representing Irish Cattle Traders' and Stock Owners' Association; Messrs. M. P. Moore, P. Hannon and K. Byrne, representing Dublin Victuallers' Association; Messrs. C. M. Fagan and J. B. Ganly, representing Dublin Salesmasters' Association; Messrs. D. McGranaghan and T. W. Molloy, representing Irish Livestock Exporters' and Traders' Association, Ltd.

The present system of purchasing meat for Dublin was fully discussed, and a number of suggestions were made with a view to effecting improvements, both in regard to the purchase of cattle for this purpose and the arrangements for the sale of the meat.

The Minister promised to have the suggestions carefully examined.

Minister Takes Over Holdings

Failure to Cultivate Arable Land

THE Minister for Agriculture, in the exercise of his powers under the Compulsory Tillage Order, has entered and taken possession of seventeen holdings where the occupiers have failed to take the necessary steps to cultivate one-fifth of their arable land.

These holdings are in the Counties of Cavan, Clare, Cork, Dublin, Galway, Kildare, Tipperary, Waterford and Westmeath. On these holdings concare lettings ranging in extent from sixty acres to one acre have been made, and the total area so let on the seventeen holdings amounts to 385 acres.

The Minister has authorised entry on a number of other farms, possession will be taken in a day or two, and arrangements made for their cultivation. In view of the advanced stage of the tillage season, the Minister cannot tolerate further delay on the part of occupiers.

Though the Order requires the cultivation of one-fifth of the arable land, there is no limit to the area which the Minister may arrange to have cultivated. An occupier whose lands have been entered may also be prosecuted, and on conviction is liable to a fine of £100 as well as imprisonment up to six months.

GREEKS RESUME IN ALBANIA

The Greeks have again assumed the initiative at several points on the Albanian front, Athens Radio stated last night, says the Press Association. The Italians suffered many losses.

"A good number of prisoners were taken, and many automatic weapons fell into our hands," said the announcer. The actions took place yesterday. Greek heavy guns scored direct hits on marching columns and transport.

Last night's Greek communiqué, according to Athens radio, stated:—"After a successful local operation we occupied an enemy centre of resistance. All men in it were encircled and disposed of. No one escaped. Two hundred and two prisoners were taken, including six officers."

MR. MATSUOKA IN ROME

"HEART-TO-HEART TALK" WITH LEADERS

FROM REUTER'S CORRESPONDENT.

ROME, Monday.

Mr. Matsuoka, Japanese Foreign Minister, arrived here this evening. He was met at the station by Count Ciano, Italian Foreign Minister, members of the Italian Government, the Secretary of the Fascist Party, the German Ambassador, and diplomats representing the other signatories of the Tripartite Pact, including Yugoslavia. The station was elaborately beflagged with the German, Italian and Japanese colours.

Mr. Matsuoka inspected a guard of honour drawn up outside the station, while bands played the National Anthems of Italy and Japan. The Japanese Minister then drove with Count Ciano to the Villa Madama, where he is to stay. Crowds lining the streets behind rows of troops shouted "Banzai," and waved Japanese flags as he passed. One of the streets he drove along was "Hitler avenue."

In an interview before leaving Berlin, quoted by the German radio, Mr. Matsuoka said:—"In three days on the spot I have gathered more experience than I could have acquired in ten years' study of Germany in my own country. In Berlin I have had many heart-to-heart talks with German leaders. I have also had an opportunity of getting into contact with the German people."

Mr. Matsuoka, the Japanese Foreign Minister, will meet Signor Mussolini to-morrow, according to a Rome despatch, and will lunch with King Victor Emmanuel. His audience with the Pope will be on Thursday.

ADMIRAL DARLAN IN PARIS

Admiral Darlan, who arrived in Paris on Sunday, had several talks with the German Occupation authorities yesterday, says the Official German News Agency. He had a long interview with M. de Brinon, Vichy's representative in Paris, later. Admiral Darlan is spending two days in Paris.

GERMANS LEAVING YUGOSLAVIA

REPORTS OF COMING ULTIMATUM

MESSAGES from Belgrade tell of the hurried departure of German nationals from Yugoslavia and of reports that the departure of the last of them will be followed by a German ultimatum.

The Secretary of the German Legation is reported to have said that the situation was "desperate and practically hopeless."

General Simovitch, the Premier, in an order broadcast to the nation, declares:—"Our Army, Air Force and Navy are prepared to do their duty. The Government is pursuing a friendly policy towards all our neighbours, and insists that the relations with these countries remain on the friendliest neighbourly terms. To this end the Government is taking all necessary steps. All civilians are asked to remain calm and to continue with their work."

People are forbidden to leave their homes, and are ordered to guard their houses, and, if necessary, "even defend them at the cost of their lives for the sake of the Fatherland, the King and the nation."

Evacuation is to be permitted as foreseen, and carried out at the order of the authorised Ministers.

ASSOCIATED PRESS TELEGRAM.

BELGRADE, Monday

Dr. Matchek, the Croat leader and Yugoslav Vice-Premier, called a conference in Zagreb to-day of all Croat deputies to discuss questions of co-operation in the new Yugoslav Government.

Officials of the Croat Party left Zagreb for Belgrade on Sunday night, with a view to determining the Government attitude on the questions of Croat autonomy and the Axis pact, while giving Dr. Matchek's view on the same subjects to the Government.

German sources in Belgrade stated to-day that the Reich intended to wait only until the last German evacuee had left Yugoslavia before serving an ultimatum with a short time-limit upon the Yugoslav Government. The ultimatum would demand the demobilisation of the Yugoslav Army.

These German sources said that the Reich had set Monday midnight as the absolute dead-line for all German nationals to leave Yugoslavia.

Failure to comply with the threatened ultimatum would bring immediate hostilities, it was added.

It has not been possible to confirm these statements in either official German or Yugoslav quarters.

HURRIED EXODUS

From every corner of Yugoslavia German citizens were reported to be streaming towards the frontier by ship, train and motor car. German nationals were even leaving Serbia and Croatia. A special train carrying eight hundred Germans left Zagreb for Germany on Sunday night, and others followed this morning.

It has been said that Croat officials expressed regret that the Germans were leaving, and helped to expedite their departure.

Twelve hundred Germans jammed the Danube excursion boat Iranus on Sunday evening in the mass evacuation from Belgrade to Budapest.

MOVEMENTS OF MINISTERS

The German Legation in Belgrade announced to-day that Von Viktor Heeren, the German Minister to Yugoslavia, was leaving for Berlin.

At the same time it was announced that the Yugoslav Minister in Berlin, Andvitch, had arrived suddenly in Belgrade. The Secretary of the German Legation, who made the announcement, said: "The situation, which was serious, but not hopeless, yesterday, is to-day desperate and practically hopeless."

M. Andritch and Herr von Heeren conferred briefly at noon to-day before the German Minister left for Berlin. Informed circles expected that M. Matchek's lieutenant, M. August Kostitch, Vice-president of the Croat Party, would return to Zagreb from Belgrade to-night, after which M. Matchek would come to Belgrade on Tuesday morning, and resume his place in the ranks of a united Government, assuming that reports that he and General Simovitch had reached agreement proved to be correct.

BRITISH WOMEN LEAVE

A Press Association telegram of Monday's date says:—

The German Minister, von Heeren, saw off 1,100 German civilians as they left here by special Danube steamer last night.

The passengers included a hundred "tourists," who left messages with their landlords stating: "We shall be back in a month." In most cases they have left their furniture here, and are keeping on the tenancy of their apartments.

All three Legations of the belligerent nations were working to-day with reduced staffs.

At the request of the British Minister (Mr. Ronald Campbell) nearly all British women here left the capital last night for Istanbul.

To-night a special train is taking the remaining Germans to Vienna. The Italians have already disappeared.

GERMANS ALLEGE ILL-TREATMENT

The German Radio and Press allege ill-treatment of German nationals in Yugoslavia. According to one statement, "in the Banat and the Balchka districts German nationals are being exposed to persecution by excited Serbian elements, encouraged by the authorities." Shops and houses in a small German colony in Gross-Betschkerek are alleged to have been destroyed, and the Germans themselves to have been roughly handled. Organised street demonstrations are alleged to be increasing, and are "characterised by the carrying of British and Polish flags and the singing of British songs." "We should hang all Germans," the demonstrators are said to shout, "but there are not enough trees."

CLOSING RING IN AFRICA

Advance Past Diredawa

BRITISH THRUST TO ADDIS ABABA

A RING of steel is closing tightly on the remnant of Italy's East African Empire with the cutting of the Abyssinia railway by the occupation of Diredawa, says the Press Association.

From every direction British forces are pushing on relentlessly, giving the retreating Italians no respite, and yesterday's official communiqué from G.H.Q., Cairo, states that, following the occupation of Diredawa by South African troops, the force is now advancing still farther westwards.

In Eritrea the advance continues towards Asmara, the capital, and the only remaining port of Massawa, while the R.A.F. has been blasting a way for the advance by heavy raids on Italian concentrations.

Earlier communiqués from Nairobi yesterday disclosed first the capture of Carsa, between Harar and Diredawa, and then announced the occupation of Diredawa itself, thus confirming the Italian admission that this strategic point had been evacuated.

Diredawa, the city of Abyssinia, lies half way along the 486 miles of railway from Jibuti, in French Somaliland to Addis Ababa, the capital. Its capture means that British forces can exercise a stranglehold on the easterly approach to Addis Ababa, and they have cut off the last line of escape into French Somaliland.

ROAD CLEARED

According to the Nairobi announcement, extensive demolitions on the mountainous main road from Harar to Diredawa have now been cleared, and there is a road through again.

"The enemy has been more active in the air recently, but without affecting our advance, which continues," it says. "North of Lake Rudolf our troops have penetrated far into Southern Abyssinia, and operations in the Neghelli area are proceeding to our advantage. Little opposition is being met."

Yesterday's Italian communiqué claimed that in East Africa Italian troops inflicted "very heavy losses" in a "violent battle" east of Keren. "Our losses are also numerous," it added.

AIR FIGHTS OVER ALBANIA

British bombers attacked objectives in and near Elbasan, in Albania, on Sunday, with successful results, according to yesterday's communiqué issued by the headquarters of the British forces in Greece, quoted by the Press Association.

"Enemy fighters," the communiqué adds, "attempted to intercept, but broke off the engagement when one of them was hit a number of times and dived vertically, emitting black smoke from the engine cowlings. Offensive reconnaissance flights were carried out in the Tepeleni area, also with good results. From all operations all our machines returned safely."

MEDITERRANEAN BATTLE

Italian Naval Losses Mounting

First Big Night Action Since Jutland

AS Britain's Mediterranean battle fleet moved slowly towards its berths at Alexandria yesterday two words were flashed from ship to ship—"Well done." They were a tribute from Admiral Sir Andrew Cunningham, Commander-in-Chief, and a terse epilogue to what is described as the greatest naval battle of the war.

Latest details include:—

It is probable that a third cruiser and a fourth destroyer, making seven warships, were sunk.

The battle, which ranged over 200 miles, was for the most part fought in darkness, and is the first big night naval engagement since Jutland.

Torpedo-carrying 'planes of the Fleet Air Arm seriously damaged a Littorio class battleship and considerably reduced her speed.

Only when German dive bombers attacked British rescue vessels did they abandon attempts to rescue Italian seamen. Two of the bombers were shot down.

The leading ship of the British battle fleet was the Warspite, which opened fire with her fifteen-inch guns from a distance of just under two miles—with devastating effect.

Cruiser Orion Used As Decoy

The strategy employed by Admiral Sir Andrew Cunningham to bring the Italian Fleet to battle was disclosed last night in further despatches from Alexandria.

The cruiser Orion, it is stated, was used as a decoy, and for four hours lured the unsuspecting Italians towards the waiting British Fleet. Not until darkness fell did the Italians suddenly see looming ahead the silhouettes of the menacing battleships, Warspite, Barham and Valiant. But due to the excellence of British instruments British ships had seen them first, and were waiting ready.

Before they could escape shells from 15-inch guns, fired at point blank range, hurtled towards them. The result in the words of the Commander-in-Chief were "devastating."

Sir Andrew Cunningham said in an interview that he believed the Italian Fleet had sailed out "under German instigation."

Admiral's "Well Done" Signal

A Press Association despatch from Alexandria gives the text of a message which Admiral Cunningham signalled to his Fleet, ending with the words, "Well done," and also gives a graphic description of the great battle.

"The operations just concluded have given us a notable success and supremacy," signalled Sir Andrew.

"The skilful handling of our cruisers and the untiring efforts of the Fleet Air Arm kept me well informed of enemy movements, and the well-pressed-home attacks of torpedo-bomber aircraft on the Littorio so reduced the speed of the enemy fleet that we were able to gain contact during the night and inflict heavy damage.

"The devastating results of the battleships' gunfire are ample reward for months of patient training.

"This work was completed by destroyers in the admirable way we have come to expect of them.

"The contribution of the engine-room departments to this success cannot be over-emphasised. Their work, not only in keeping their ships steaming at high speed for long periods but in the work of maintenance under very difficult conditions, has been most praiseworthy.

"I am most grateful to all in the Fleet for their support on this and all other occasions.

"Well done!"

COVERED 200 MILES

It is now revealed, states the Alexandria despatch describing the battle, that this, the first night action to be fought by battleships since Jutland, lasted about twelve hours and covered some 200 miles.

The results so far known are:—

Heavy damage to a battleship of the Littorio class;

Three 8-inch gun cruisers, Zara, Pola and Fiume, sunk;

One 6-inch cruiser of the Giovanni Nelle Bande Nere class probably sunk;

Two destroyers, Maestrale and Vincenzo Gioberti, sunk and one other probably sunk;

Two Italian and one German aircraft shot down, and

Over 900 prisoners captured.

Two British aircraft failed to return, but no casualties were suffered on surface craft.

A denial by the Italian Navy Ministry that the light cruiser Giovanni Della Bande Nere had been sunk was quoted by the official News Agency last night, says the Press Association.

FIRST NEWS

The first news of the Italian Fleet's activity was an air reconnaissance report sent in on Thursday. It stated that a force was steaming eastwards, near Cape Passaro, the southernmost tip of Sicily. With dramatic suddenness the British Fleet immediately sailed in order to make contact.

On Friday morning one battleship, of the Littorio class, and a force of Italian cruisers were contacted by British light forces southward of the western end of Crete; while further air reconnaissance reported a second force, comprising two battleships, cruisers and destroyers further north.

The Fleet Air Arm and the Royal Air Force immediately attacked, the former seriously damaging the Littorio battleship, reducing her speed considerably, while several hits were also registered on the cruisers and destroyers, while the aircraft and light forces thus maintained contact with the Italians, who endeavoured to scatter and return to their base, the battleships followed up. They were only able to make contact as darkness fell.

Shortly after 9 p.m. the British Battle Fleet closed on an unknown vessel which had been reported as stopped. When nearing the ship's position a number of other darkened ships were noticed to starboard, and one British destroyer's searchlights suddenly pierced the darkness, picking out the third ship in the Italian line, which proved to be an 8-in. cruiser.

BROADSIDES FROM WARSPITE

The leading ship of the British Battle Fleet was the Warspite, which immediately opened fire with her 15-in. guns from a distance of just under two miles. The effect was devastating. The cruiser Fiume lit up the surrounding sea by a violent burst of red flame, extending from the foremost funnel to the after gun turret. One observer said that the after turret itself was blown clean over the side.

While the ship was thus blazing the Warspite poured in a further broadside, causing a fresh outburst of flame.

By now the entire Battle Fleet was in action, the whole scene being lit up by gunfire, the blazing ships and searchlights.

Before the Italians had any chance to reply a second cruiser, Zara, was burning fiercely, when she received a broadside from the Warspite.

The third cruiser, Pola, was likewise dealt with by other British battleships, the whole action taking a matter of seconds.

900 SURVIVORS

After the engagement the battleships withdrew in order to give a clear field of action for the light units to finish off, but the searchlights revealed two Italian destroyers astern of their cruisers apparently endeavouring to launch a torpedo attack against the battleships.

The latter therefore opened fire against the destroyers, who retired behind a smoke screen.

The British destroyers then sank the blazing cruisers Pola, Zara and Fiume with torpedoes, while other units of the Fleet continued to inflict damage on the remaining Italian ships.

This damage cannot yet be ascertained owing to the rapidly changing phases of the night action.

On the following morning 900 survivors were picked up, while at least 300 more could have been saved had not German aircraft arrived and endeavoured to bomb the ships carrying out the work of rescue.

The Commander-in-Chief had no option but to abandon the rescue work, meanwhile signalling to the Italian Chief of Naval Staff to send out a hospital ship to pick up the remaining survivors.

The prisoners comprise 68 officers and 849 ratings. Admiral Cantoni, whose flagship was the Zara, is missing, but Captain Despiai, of the Italian cruiser Pola was saved.

Gunnery Officer's Description

The Warspite sighted three cruisers and two to four destroyers about 150 miles west of Crete at 9 p.m. on Friday.

A gunnery officer of the Warspite told me, writes Larry Allen, Associated Press Correspondent: "Shortly after 9 p.m. the battleships Warspite, Valiant and Barham were ordered to close position after an unidentified vessel was reported stopped by the Vice-Admiral's light forces.

"At 10 p.m. we were approximately in position.

"At 10.20 p.m. we sighted a number of darkened ships on our starboard bow. There appeared to be three cruisers and two to four destroyers.

"Almost simultaneously we were challenged by another ship on the port beam.

"The Fleet turned to starboard to bring us on an opposite course to the remaining cruisers, and our heavy armament was brought to readiness.

"A few seconds later one of our destroyers—the Greyhound—switched her searchlight on a third ship. We recognised her as one of the eight-inch gun cruisers of the Zara Class, and subsequently learned she was the Fiume.

DEVASTATING

"The Warspite's 15-inch guns at once opened fire at very close range.

BRITISH SHIPS ENGAGED

Among the ships engaged were:—

Battleships—Warspite, Barham and Valiant.

Cruiser—Orion.

Destroyers — Havock and Greyhound.

The first broadside struck the cruiser with devastating effect.

"The whole ship, from the foremast tunnel to the aft, burst into a mass of flames. The aft turret was blown clean over the side.

"After one more broadside had caused a fresh outburst of fire, the ship was hopelessly crippled.

"We switched our fire to the next cruiser in the line—the Zara. Again the first salvo produced an incredible effect, the vessel bursting into flames.

"By now the entire Battle Fleet was in action.

"Destroyers sang the cruiser Pola.

TORPEDOES LAUNCHED

"Our searchlights illuminated two destroyers. These were ideally placed for torpedo attacks against us and, turning, launched torpedoes.

"The Fleet altered course away from this menace, engaging the destroyers, which retired behind heavy smoke-screens. At the same time, the Commander-in-Chief ordered our destroyers to finish off the burning cruisers. Destroyers went in and with torpedoes put out the Pola, Zara and Fiume. During the course of the action the destroyers Maestrale and Vincenzo Gioberti—behind smoke-screens—were sunk."

ADMIRALTY COMMUNIQUE

A communiqué issued by the Admiralty in London yesterday stated:—"Some further details of the operations in the Eastern Mediterranean have now been received from the Commander-in-Chief. During these operations, in which severe losses have been inflicted upon the enemy, no damage or casualties have been sustained by any of our ships, but two of our aircraft are missing. The next-of-kin will be informed.

"Air reconnaissance on March 27 reported a force of enemy warships to the eastward of Cape Passero, in Sicily, steering to the East. On the morning of March 28 our light forces sighted one "Littorio" class battleship, accompanied by cruisers, to the south-west of Crete, while air reconnaissance reported two battleships, cruisers and destroyers to the north of this position. After being sighted the enemy gradually hauled round to the westward, proceeding at high speed.

"On receiving the news that a fleet action was expected, a squadron of Greek naval forces hastened to take up a strategic position with our fleet.

NAVAL AIRCRAFT

"During the day the Littorio class battleship was repeatedly and successfully attacked with torpedoes by our naval aircraft. The battleship was seriously damaged and her speed was considerably reduced.

"A successful attack was also made by bombers of the Royal Air Force, who scored several hits on cruisers and destroyers.

"The loss of speed resulting from these air attacks enabled our heavier ships to gain contact with the enemy, but it was only as darkness fell that close action was joined.

"Our battleships, with accompanying light forces, went into the attack, and, as already announced, the eight-inch cruisers Pola, Zara and Fiume, the large destroyer Vincenedo Gioberti and the destroyer Maestrale were sunk.

"It is probable that one other destroyer was sunk, and possible that the six-inch cruiser Giovanni Delle Bande Nere was sunk as well.

"Damage was seen to be inflicted on the enemy ships, but details could not be established owing to the darkness and the speed at which the action was being fought.

"Two JU 88 dive-bombers were shot down during the daylight operations.

RESCUE SHIPS ATTACKED

"On the morning of March 29 nearly a thousand Italian survivors were rescued. It would have been possible to save two or three hundred more but for attacks by German bombers on the ships engaged in the task of rescuing Italian seamen. In these circumstances further risk to the rescuing vessels could not be accepted.

"The Commander-in-Chief, Mediterranean, made a signal to the chief of the Italian naval staff, indicating the position of the survivors, whom he had been forced to abandon, and suggesting that a hospital ship should be sent.

"A reply was received, and it is, therefore, possible that some of these men may be rescued.

"Among those saved was Captain Despisi, of the Italian cruiser Pola.

"Admiral Cantonix, commanding the Italian eight-inch cruiser squadron, is missing."

ITALIAN CLAIMS

The Italian communiqué yesterday spoke of "a violent battle" in the Mediterranean and admitted the loss of three cruisers and two destroyers.

It claimed that a heavy British cruiser was sunk and two other units seriously hit.

H.M.S. Warspite the 30,000 tons battleship, was the vessel which led the raid in the narrow waters of Narvik Fjord nearly a year ago.

One of the Queen Elizabeth class battleships, Warspite carries eight 15-inch guns, eight 6-inch guns, and eight 4-inch anti-aircraft guns, and has four aircraft with catapults. Her complement is more than 1,100.

In 1915, when only three years old, her service was nearly ended at Jutland. Her steering gear was damaged, and she turned two complete circles in front of the German Fleet. Though badly hit she managed to reach port safely.

DEFICIT OF £3,134,372

HOW IRISH EXCHEQUER STANDS

THE Minister for Finance last night issued his Exchequer return for the year ended March 31st, 1941. The revenue at £34,637,659 exceeds the Budget Estimate by £868,659, while Expenditure at £37,772,031 is £4,007,031 higher than the estimate.

Comparing 1940-41 with 1939-40, there is an increase in revenue of £2,248,912 and an increase in expenditure of £3,377,008. Total receipts amounted to £36,259,194 compared with £48,698,740 in 1939-40, and total issues to £39,153,533 compared with £45,714,205 on March 31st, 1940.

The balance in the Exchequer on March 31st, 1941, was £728,320 compared with £3,622,659 on the same date in the previous year.

The following are the totals of revenue and expenditure for the last three financial years:—

	1940-41.	1939-40.	1938-39.
Revenue	£34,637,659	£32,388,744	£31,889,864
Expenditure..	37,772,031	34,395,023	33,110,247
Deficit	£ 3,134,372	Def. £ 2,006,279	Def. £ 1,226,383

BRITAIN'S HUGE EXPENDITURE

NEARLY THIRTEEN MILLIONS A DAY

Britain's expenditure showed an average of ten and a half million pounds a day in the last twelve months, but in the three months just ended it leapt to an average of nearly thirteen millions a day.

The deficit has been covered by borrowings, including Savings Certificates and Defence, War and Savings Bonds. The most interesting feature of last night's Exchequer figures is the buoyant way in which money has been pouring in in spite of war conditions. Total ordinary revenue was £358,678,404 more than last year.

The income tax payer paid over 13 millions more than was expected. Excise, which presumably includes the first yield of the purchase tax, totalled £224,100,000, compared with £137,900,000 last year.

NIGHT RAIDERS OFF ENGLISH COAST

Air activity over and around Britain last night was again slight, and mainly off the north-east coast. Raiders were reported over several other areas, but up to a late hour no incidents had been reported.

London again had no warning—its eleventh consecutive quiet night.

At a north-east coast town there were victims, however, when property was damaged. An R.A.F. centre was put out of action.

The German Embassy in Washington, says the French Official Agency, quoting the German wireless, has addressed a second protest to the State Department against the closing of the American frontier to two German prisoners of war who escaped from a prison camp in Canada.

The first production of this romantic comedy was greatly enjoyed by a very large audience. David Sears is a dramatist who has been closely associated with the Gate Theatre since its inception, and one who has given it some of its best remembered plays. He may be said to have grown up as a writer with that famous institution. It was a typical Gate Theatre production, therefore, that we were given in "The Forced Marriage," and one which had to the full the freshness and, at the same time, the finish, of the Edwards-MacLiammoir combination's work at its best.

The author dips into Irish history for his theme, but he does not delve further than is necessary into the period from which he takes his story. It is the time just after the battle of the Boyne, when the supporters of the unlucky James found their lands and property confiscated for the benefit of the victorious Williamites. The dispossessed contrived various means of regaining what they had lost. Marriage was a way that was sometimes used.

"The Forced Marriage" opens in the mansion of one of the dispossessed. It belonged to Sir Terence O'Hagan; we now see it occupied by Dorothy Marwood, the daughter of some Williamite. The dramatist gives us the situation swiftly, for his dialogue, consistently good throughout, is best in the opening scenes. The new owner is not too safely in possession. She is a beautiful girl, and she is in a perilous situation. Sir Terence arrives with his friend, Anthony Breslin, and his mother and sister appear also about the same time. He makes no secret of his purpose. He is going to force the lady to marry him, and he has come fully prepared for the ceremony. The marriage takes place. The lady remains delightfully rebellious almost to the end of the play, and our interest is held through a series of skilfully contrived situations in two slightly different manners of the stage.

Sir Terence and Dorothy are two very charming people, and around them are people of charm, too, who help rather more than hinder the final solution of their difficulty. Sir Terence may have been in love with her even before he thought of the plan of the forced marriage, but she has still to fall in love with him. We see it happening, and it is all very bright and sparkling. Bit by bit the suggestion of compulsion disappears, and we know that everything is going to end happily.

"The Forced Marriage" has on one side a very considerable touch of the old-fashioned manner of the theatre, but it is agreeably combined with a deft handling of the modern manner of play-writing. Our pleasure in the charm of the play is never spoiled by asking us to look at men and women in a way that would be remote from our own experience of life. While dealing with people out of a time long gone the dramatist keeps them fully alive for us. His two ways of handling them do not break apart.

There was a curtailment, rather than a slowing, of the action nearing the end, and just when we were in the mood for a little more complication of the situation between the hero and the heroine. One felt that the end came, perhaps, a little too abruptly in a play which had not tried at any point to overdo its own quiet charm. Micheál MacLiammoir as Sir Terence had a part that suited him better than any he has had since the start of his present season at the Gaiety. He had to carry a good deal of the play with him, but his material gave him the opportunity of doing it without any apparent effort. Meriel Moore had a fine part as Dorothy Marwood, and she was grand in every moment of it. Coralie Carmichael as Lady O'Hagan had one of those chances of comedy which she handles so well when they come to her. Shelagh Richards had a part to fill which did not seem large enough for her, but she filled what there was of it with her usual skill. Liam Gaffney, Roy Terry and T. St. John Barry made excellent contributions, each in his own special way. May Carey and Hazel Malcolm had two small parts in which they are likely to appear to better advantage as the run of the play proceeds.

The author was given a most enthusiastic reception at the close.

MR. W. NORTON ON TILLAGE

HOW TO MEET FUEL SHORTAGE

Mr. W. Norton, T.D., speaking in Kildare, said that if through tenderness in dealing with the owners fertile lands were not put under the plough the responsibility for a shortage in food production would fall upon the Government.

In respect of fuel supplies, the Government could make good the shortage of imports by directing the Turf Development Board to exploit the large turbary areas which were lying idle or partly developed. Large-scale public works should be initiated to assist in dealing with unemployment arising from a shortage of material for their industries.

SEAMEN'S FATAL ERROR

FROM REUTER'S CORRESPONDENT.
BOSTON, Monday.

The Belgian freighter Ville de Liege (7,463 tons), with her flag at half-mast and a lifeboat missing, arrived here to-day, with a tragic story of the death of 12 members of her crew, who at night mistook a British patrol ship for a German raider. They became panic-stricken when a warning shot was fired, and launched a lifeboat. They jumped into it, and were not seen again.

YUGOSLAVIA

SEMI-OFFICIAL STATEMENT

A semi-official statement here to-day said:—

"The departure from Yugoslavia of a number of German citizens is probably the result of some regrettable incidents due to irresponsible persons on the occasion of the patriotic demonstrations of March 27 and 28. These incidents were deeply deplored and condemned both by the Government and public opinion generally.

"With regard to them, the Government calls on the population to remain calm in all circumstances, and to pay no attention to alarmist rumours.

"It is doing all in its power to dispel any suspicion regarding its desire to maintain good relations with its neighbours."

SIGNIFICANT VISIT TO ANKARA

The Yugoslav Minister in Moscow, M. Gabrilovitch, has gone to Ankara, according to a Budapest despatch, quoting the newspaper, Mayna. "He is carrying on very important conversations with the Turkish Foreign Minister, M. Sarajoglu," the paper adds. "There is no doubt that he is personally the best informed of the views of the Kremlin and of Ankara." The Budapest despatch adds that a number of refugees from Belgrade are arriving by train in Budapest.

Members of the Italian colony are also progressively leaving Belgrade by rail for Trieste, Venice and Milan. Lorries were this morning removing the archives of the Italian Legation. In two or three days only the male staffs of the German and Italian Legations and Consulates and a few journalists will be left in Yugoslavia.

BERLIN ON PACT "QUIBBLES"

PRESS ASSOCIATION TELEGRAM.
BERLIN, Monday.

A sharp reference to "quibbles about ratification or non-ratification" marks a semi-official statement on Yugoslavia and the Tripartite Pact, issued here this evening. It says:—

"In the Wilhelmstrasse to-day the question was being asked in foreign circles whether there was any truth in the report that anti-German elements had gained the upper hand in Belgrade, with the result that Yugoslavia's adherence to the Three-Power Pact no longer had any significance.

"Germany's reply to this question, as also to that concerning the applicability or non-applicability of the Tripartite Pact in regard to Yugoslavia, was that no decision had yet been taken. Yugoslavia freely signed the Three-Power Pact, and thereby legalises Yugoslavia's adherence Quibbles about ratification or non-ratification are, consequently, superfluous; but whether the Yugoslav Government, for its part, will keep the pact or not Germany, of course, cannot express any opinion. That is entirely a matter for the Yugoslav Government.'"

A source at the Legation said:—"A decisive turn for the better is not impossible, but it would be an unexpected miracle."

The Belgrade Government meanwhile has pushed ahead with its military preparations, calling more men to the colours.

It was reliably reported here this afternoon that Dr. Matchek had reached an agreement with General Simovitch in order to make the country united at this critical moment.

Dr. Matchek was reported to be asking the Premier whether Croatia would be assured of continued Home Rule and of "peace with all her neighbours." That was his price for co-operation with the Simovitch Government.

A report that a German emissary had arrived in Zagreb on Sunday night from Berlin with a message for Dr. Matchek could not be confirmed.

THE ACADEMY OPENS

AN IMPRESSION OF YESTERDAY

By PATRICK KAVANAGH

SOMETIMES it is Punchestown or maybe the foyer of the Abbey Theatre, but yesterday it was Art. What are you referring to?

I am referring to the different sorts of excuses we have in this country for indulging our talent for talk.

Yesterday it was Art, and a good job, too; for outside was the wettest thirty-first of March for over three years. Far in the background are pictures, but before we get to that we must get in. We are all announced, just the way Eliza Doolittle was introduced in the Pygmalion film. I never thought I'd have my name announced so officially. Inside was the continuous buzz of conversation. Let's listen-in. A very fat woman is interrogating a photographer—bits of it get lost:—

"The six children should make a grand photo. Would it cost more, I mean to say, if I was in it myself?"

"Need to be bigger, of course."

A hand is waving a catalogue. "That one up there of the girl in white; what do you think of it?"

"Nice girl, Kathleen Ryan."

"Oh, hello, how do you do, how do you do. Just up from Wicklow. . . ."

"What do you think of that one?"

Somebody consults her catalogue. It is surprising the number of Flawner Bannals there are all through the world. Tell me who it's by and I'll place it for you to a hair's breadth.

ORDER AND RITUAL

People are still coming in, some of the most distinguished men and women, and you would never imagine it if you didn't hear the name announced. Really this opening ceremony is one of, if not the biggest, social events in Ireland. There is just that necessary order and ritual that makes culture possible—ritual protects the artist provided the thing doesn't become too crusty. We owe to the so-called Anglo-Irish this quiet, orderly, academical way. The native Gael is liable to go mad and break things.

What about the pictures and the sculptures?

Well, after going round three times I am more muddled than ever. Somebody is after telling me that it's a Keating exhibition. A minute later I hear Jack Yeats being described by a poet as the greatest genius in Europe. A portrait that is having a great deal of attention and admiration is Patrick O'Connor's portrait of his famous father. A great portrait, indeed.

I stop for a moment before Sean O'Sullivan's "F. R. Higgins," and the poet lives again. All F.R.'s strength and weakness, and ugliness as an enemy too, is in this portrait. A man is liable to break into Finnegan's Wake language when he approaches Harry Kernoff's "Extension In Time-space." Wonder what the world-famous physicist, Dr. Schroedinger, who is present, would say to it? Later on I did hear an argument in which the Nobel Prize-winner was slightly mixed up. But anon.

WOMEN IN ART

The general impression one gets from the exhibition is that it has a high level of competence, but among the known artists no genius—with the possible exception of Jack Yeats. This competence may be seen in the fact that there are fifty-seven women exhibitors, or more than one-third of the total. Women add slickness to an art, but in proportion as women succeed in that art the level of criticism sinks. Sounds crankish, but it has a lot of truth in it.

In painting here to-day we have more of the outward show of æstheticism than in the sister art of poetry. There are more beards here and more pose, but—

No real struggle seems to have been responsible for the birth of anything in this show. There is no passionate grief to express that quintessential mind which is the angel caught in clay. We are not moved. We may say: How lovely and how nice, and all that, but we have experienced no god-crazy emotion.

"Do you get that in poetry to-day?" a painter asks me.

I can only answer no. But then in poetry in present-day Ireland the standard is about as low as can be. But, wait. I thought of something.

There is a school of painting—many schools, in fact. I suggest that there should be less schools of painting and sculpture. Art has become too soft. It has become the property of a lazy, leisurely class of men and women. A peasant can hardly become a painter, though he might make a shot at stone-cutting, and this is a mistake. We have the easy folk with paternal allowances making our art and what doesn't come out of grief and trial isn't tested in the fire.

MILK AND WATER

A pleasant show I admit. More than pleasant; it was delightful. Yet we lacked power, and more than anything else—intellectualism. There was no thought in this work. Complacent milk and water sentiment.

There was that lyrical "Mourning Fisherman," by Jerome Connor, which shows the poet's mind, and there was a head of the late George Atkinson, by Laurence Campbell, which gave an uncanny insight into the tragedy that was impending. And there was a sweet, wee child, by George Collie. It was about this time that the dreadful news was broken to us that owing to rationing, no tea would be served. Bang went the most interesting part of the show. Queueing up with a cup poised for the spout of the tay-pot. No tay! What a blow.

And it is still pouring rain.

I wander around in hope. What a wonderful thing it would be to discover some great genius among the unknown. In this gallery there may be a Michael Angelo or a Raphael. I remember out of the show. "Lady Lavery: A Study," a strange ethereal piece of a spider's web stretched in frosty sunlight; "A London Interior," by Davis Ritcher, with the light playing on the lacquered cabinet; "A Bunch of Flowers," by Crampton Walker, and "Cardinal MacRory," by Leo Whelan; a most remarkable pencil drawing of Tom Casement, by Lilian Davidson, and "Evening," by Jack Yeats.

But best of all I remember seeing Ireland's best poet—who shall be nameless—running into Dr. Schroedinger, who was then engaged in conversation with a Government Minister and a university professor.

Like a time bomb that was unsuspected by anyone he burst out:

"I strongly suspect anybody who deals in physics and stuff of that description." The great mathematician only smiled.

One of the others turned to the poet and said: "Don't you think that there's something very poetical in modern science?"

"Not true enough to be poetical," said the poet.

And just like that the argument got going.

"Isn't it as good a cosmology as the Miltonic one?"

"Open to suspicion."

The gallery is emptying out. A bell rings.

The President of the Academy still smiles benignly on his artistic children, though his wrist must be tired after having shaken hands with everyone.

Well, it was a wonderful evening in spite of the rain. Against a back-background of lovely pictures we talked. It was worth while getting wet and hungry, for behind the talk, the light-hearted social veneer, the femininity and the Flawner Bannals there was real artistic activity. Here we saw an Academy that provided an atmosphere of sympathy and reticence in which the wild spirit of Ireland can have her fling.

BRITISH RAIDS ON OCCUPIED PORTS

BOMBING OF GERMAN BATTLESHIPS

BRITISH bombers and fighters made a ten-minute lightning sweep across the Channel and over French occupied ports yesterday, says the Press Association. Soon after they had left the Kent coast the heavy "crump" of falling bombs was heard.

It is believed that German shipping off Cap Gris Nez was also attacked. British bombers were seen to dive towards the sea, and almost immediately there were explosions on the water.

It is believed that German shipping off Cap Gris Nez was also attacked. British bombers were seen to dive towards the sea, and almost immediately there were explosions on the water.

The German warships, Scharnhorst and Gneisenau, are at Brest, and were heavily attacked by British bombers on Sunday night, it was disclosed yesterday.

"Direct hits on the ships were not observed," states the Air Ministry communiqué, "but the docks in which they were lying were straddled from all directions by medium, large and very large bombs. Many more of these fell on the quayside, and bursts were seen all over the dock area. Fires broke out soon afterwards, and were burning well when the last of our aircraft left."

German air activity over Britain was virtually nil during daylight yesterday.

A few raiders made coastal patrols, which were reported from the South-East and West. No bombs were dropped.

SUNDAY NIGHT'S ATTACK

Calais harbour was attacked on Sunday night by a smaller force of British bombers, and many fires were started.

A German fighter was destroyed by British fighters in combat over the Channel yesterday morning, it was learned in London. Earlier it had been reported that one of four Messerschmitts had been sent down into the Channel by a Spitfire, which followed the raiders for miles.

During a 45 minute shelling of the Dover area yesterday, houses were severely damaged, but there were no casualties. The first shell crashed just before 11 a.m. Anderson shelters saved the lives of several families.

A British Air Ministry communiqué yesterday stated:—"The Royal Air Force carried out a heavy attack on Brest last night (Sunday), the main targets being the German battleships Scharnhorst and Gneisenau. The attack was carried out by a powerful force of aircraft.

"Heavy bombs were dropped, and direct hits were observed on the docks in which the ships were lying. The docks were straddled with very large bombs, many falling on the quayside.

"Five direct hits were scored on two enemy tankers at Le Havre. Both vessels were seen to be on fire and sinking.

"A smaller force of bombers attacked Calais, and many bombs were dropped, causing many fires.

"From these operations no aircraft is missing."

MESSERSCHMITT DESTROYED

"A Spitfire pilot of the Fighter Command brought about the destruction of an enemy fighter yesterday morning without firing a single shot," states the British Air Ministry News Service.

"The British pilot was flying alone nearly four miles high above the Channel, when he was suddenly attacked by four Messerschmitt 109's, which dived on him simultaneously from all directions. The Spitfire pilot evaded their first concerted attack, then put his nose down, and went into a dive of such velocity that the transparent cover of his cockpit was torn away and his goggles were whipped off his face. Four thousand feet above the water he eased out of his dive, and saw a Messerschmitt 109, which had been following him down, hurtle past out of control and plunge on to hit the sea with a terrific splash. The Spitfire pilot completed his mission and returned safely to his base with his ammunition still intact."

NOW—A MEDICAL VIEWPOINT ON BEAUTY CULTURE

Beauty's '12'

YOUR FACE is your fortune IF your skin is lovely, and not unless—say the milkmaids of 1941! But seriously, opinions about beauty are changing very quickly these days. And have you noticed what is the lesson to be learnt? Admiration goes to the young woman with a natural, glowing loveliness of skin. Let your make-up be of the slightest. Look natural, and look after your skin.

If you asked your doctor . . .

what is the substance he most often puts into prescriptions for the treatment of delicate skins, for the care of minor skin blemishes—he would say 'Calamine' every time. Calamine is constantly used by skin specialists. They find its soothing, gentle action invaluable. They

Rugby Football

Probable Leinster Cup-finalists

By Our Rugby Football Correspondent.

THE Rugby football season is now drawing near its close; provided there are no drawn games the Leinster Senior Cup competition will occupy only three more Saturdays, and most of the junior, minor and schools' competitions are either finished or advanced to the closing stages. It was a season devoid of any outstanding events, and drab by comparison with the years when international games were played. Still, it must be said that the four branches of the Irish Rugby Union made strong efforts to make it as interesting as possible, and the plan of playing return matches between the respective provinces was a happy idea.

The Senior Cup

Club play throughout the season has not been up to standard, and of the Senior Cup matches already decided the majority aroused little enthusiasm. We are promised better fare in the near future, as on Saturday next the four best teams in the competition will be in action, and it looks as if the winners of these two second round matches will appear in the final on April 19.

Last Saturday Old Wesley defeated Palmerston and BectiveRangers knocked out Monkstown, both winning teams qualifying for the semi-final round, in which Old Wesley will meet the winners of next Saturday's match between Old Belvedere and Clontarf, and Bective will oppose the winners of the Lansdowne v. Blackrock College game.

Cup ties often bring surprises, but on the season's play the teams most likely to reach the final are Old Belvedere (holders) and Blackrock College, and they should provide a good final, for as well as being the best teams on form, each aims at good, open play.

To-day's Schools' Cup Final

By comparison with the senior club play the Schools provided some excellent games in both the Senior and Junior Cup competitions. Blackrock College, with an exceptionally big side, went to the end of the Junior competition, but their Seniors met defeat when opposing Dominican College, Newbridge, and the latter school then played a scoreless draw with Cistercian College, Roscrea, in the final last Wednesday. The replay of this match this afternoon at Lansdowne Road might well turn out to be one of the best games of the season. Both sides have been showing improvement as they advanced in the competition, and it is a moot question if either would not test out some of the club sides playing in the Leinster Senior Cup. A draw was a fitting result of their first meeting, and the outcome of to-day's encounter probably will depend on which side can gain an initial score. They are two fine teams, with Roscrea possessing fast backs and good, strong forwards, but Newbridge's strength lies in their better combination. They are more of a team, and this advantage may pull them through, though I anticipate another very closely-contested game. There are many dangerous attacking backs on the Roscrea side, but the sound tackling of their Newbridge opposites held them in check last Wednesday. The Newbridge wing three-quarters are also dangerous men when near the line, and H. Barker, at scrum-half, is a match-winner in himself.

As well as the schools' game the final of the Metropolitan Cup between Wanderers 2nd and St. Mary's College 2nd also will be played to-day. It was a meritorious achievement of St. Mary's College, in their first year in senior ranks, for the second team to reach the final stage of the competition, which the first team won last year. They have a stiff proposition in Wanderers 2nd.

Easter Monday Suggestion

Now that all racing, greyhound racing and other sporting events have been banned on account of foot-and-mouth disease, Easter Monday, one of the most popular bank holidays of the year, is going to be a dull day, and one wonders if some match could not be fixed for Lansdowne road or Donnybrook. Thousands of those who yearly throng to Fairyhouse would be glad of some means of filling in the afternoon. A Defence Force v. The Rest match suggests itself as the easiest to arrange.

How To Play Golf

12—James Barrett on Putting

(In an interview with J. P. Rooney.)

WE have now arrived, as it were, on the green, where most matches are lost and won, and our series concludes, after running its interesting course for twelve weeks. I have often been told that in the selection of my "subjects" for these interviews I exercised a wise discretion.

When it came to putting I found my style in that respect somewhat cramped. I had chosen Pat O'Connor for the chip and putt. My choice for putting lay between three, but I decided that as I began with a veteran (Tom Shannon) so I should conclude, and here we have James Barrett, who has been close on 33 years with the Carrickmines Club.

James was a contemporary of the late Michael Moran, and as far back as 1906 was in the front rank of our professionals. In that year he won the P. G. A. competition at Hermitage (he was the first professional at Hermitage), and it was he who proposed Moran for membership of the P.G.A. There was no I.P.G.A. then. "My score then—72 and 76—was not a bad one. Each side of the fairway was a meadow. You were lucky if your caddie found your ball in it, and lucky also if you did not lose caddie and ball."

No. 2—Long putt with borrow from left to right. Ball has been struck boldly, with "out" well to left of hole. As it spent itself it took the borrow and rolled down to holeside. With borrow from right to left ball is played up the slope and well to the right of hole, but the ball is struck more off heel of putter to get the "pull."

The Old Method

Barrett was always an excellent putter; most of the old school were, and all through his career he has stuck to the old method—the method evidently copied from Willie Park, Jack White, Andra Kirkaldy, J. H. Taylor and the other great ones of a great and bygone school. Another whose putting has been modelled on that of the old-timers is Jack Sullivan, of Bray, a consistently sound putter.

Barrett, to my way of thinking, having watched him closely, is not of the "pendulum swing" school. He sits well down to it, plants his weight firmly on the ground, grips the shaft well down the leather, does not appear to swing the club-head and seems to

No. 1—Five yards straight putt. Body turned towards hole. Club face follows straight on to hole, although the left wrist movement in striking has turned face of club over a little.

"nip" the ball, ending with a short, low follow through.

Even watching him closely one would say he cuts the ball; but, if he cut it, it could not keep the line as it does after he has struck it. As will be seen from the photographs, he adopted on this occasion the open stance, with the weight on the left foot and the hands in front of the ball. "I have three methods of putting, but I prefer this one," he said, and, from five yards, he holed the ball four times out of six attempts.

No Standard

Personally, I will say that if I had to change to Barrett's method I would have to begin to learn to putt all over again. But undoubtedly his one is very sound. There is no such thing as a standard method of putting, and style on the green means nothing. You often see players who are real stylists with the other clubs, but who on the green adopt the most horrible-looking of attitudes.

The Carrickmines veteran does not believe in altering a pupil's method of putting. "If he can putt well I would not think of changing his style; if a player can hit the ball consistently two hundred or two hundred and fifty yards with driver or brassey with a bad style, why should I try to alter his method? I once knew a player who could do so, but every time he hit the ball he lifted his left foot and flung it after the ball, as much as to say, 'Go on!' He informed me that his friends were critical of that left foot, and asked me to get him out of the habit. I did so, and he went right off his long game. He asked me what he could do about it, and I replied, 'Kick out after the ball as you used to.' He got back to the kick and back on his game.

"A player may have an unsightly style and yet be a good player. You remember Michael Moran, of course. He had the worst style of any high-class player. With his big, wide stance and backward and forward sway, he was no stylist; but couldn't he hit them! We never had anyone like Michael as a player. But all these unstylish players had the right way of hitting the ball, and in putting, no matter how ugly-looking the style, there are things that must be attended to if the ball is to be kept on the line, whether the putt is a straight one or with borrow from right or left. The mistake that the bad putter makes, as a rule, is shoving his hands out to the right when hitting the ball. You will notice that most missed putts finish to the right of the hole.

The Grip

"When these bad putters are coming on to the ball they do not turn their left wrist enough to the left. You won't pull the ball unless you overdo the turn of the left. The grip should be taken with the left hand, not on top of the shaft, but, if anything, under it. With the left hand turned over on the grip the club-head is brought in and off the straight line, and coming back the hands are pushed out to the right.

"Look at the 'V' of the left hand; it should not, I believe, be pointing to the right shoulder, but up to the left elbow. The club should be started with the left hand, and when the ball is being hit the left hand should give it a little flick forward. Hit the ball; don't be afraid of it. Do not think of the hole all the time; your mind must be on the ball. I would rather see a player going a yard beyond the hole than to see his ball stop an inch from it—that I consider a really bad putt.

"In the majority of putts when the ball is not up the ball is spent and falls off the line. Care should be taken to see that the left arm is not stiff; when it is so, with any shot, the club cannot get through, and it is most important that the putter head should get through In the short putt the club-head does not actually turn over on the ball with the flick of the left wrist; it does so, but only gradually, with the long putt.

"The secret of good putting is all in the way you use your wrists, but players never study their wrist movement; they think only of the stance and give no attention to the working of the club-head. Perhaps I do 'nip' the short putts, but I keep the club-head going straight on after the ball, even if it be ever so little. There is nothing 'sloppy' about the properly hit putt, and 'sloppiness' is a bad fault in putting."

(Concluded.)

No. 3—The Stance. Open. Weight is well on left foot; right knee perceptibly bent outwards, with ball nearer right heel than left. Hands in front of ball. Note the grip: left hand inclined to be under shaft, as also the right. The "Vs" point more to elbows than to the shoulders.

Racing in England

Flat Season Opened Well: After the War Prospects

By GALTÉE MORE.

LONDON, Monday Night.

OUR flat racing season opened fairly well last week, and the crowd on the Carholme on the first afternoon seemed to be up to the normal standard of Lincoln Handicap Day. There was nothing very remarkable about what has to be called "the big race" of the afternoon. The four-year old gelding, Gloaming, by Dastur, owned by Mr. Sidney Raphael, who literally trotted in a supremely easy winner, was a maiden when he arrived at Lincoln, but even a maiden colt winning the Lincoln Handicap does not constitute a record.

Mr. Lambton, who trains Gloaming, is assuredly not a "maiden" in his calling. Now that Mr. Robert Gore is no more, he is our oldest trainer, and for sixty years he has been either riding or training winners. I saw it stated on Thursday morning in a journal that prides itself on accuracy that this was the first winner of the Lincolnshire Handicap Mr. Lambton had ever sent out in his long career. No one is in a better position to contradict this than Joe Canty. He rode Solenoid, who was just beaten by Dorigen, whom Mr. Lambton trained for the race eight years ago. Dorigen, whom Miss Paget now has in her stud, was a real good filly on that afternoon, and is the only one of her sex ever to have won the race with anything like the weight she carried, 9st. 11lb.

Failure of Favourites

A feature of the Lincoln Handicap was the failure of the favourites and the horses that have been running in hurdling events. There was no excuse for Uncle Archie, second a year ago, for he was beaten three furlongs out; nor was there much for last year's winner, Quartier Maitre, or Time Step. There was no great public fancy for the winner, for, apart from the fact that he had not won a race, he was thought not to be at his best.

In other races the hurdlers did well for, although Mauna Kea could only finish second in the Blankney Plate, Sister Carol won on the first afternoon and Seneca and Jamaica Inn on the second. Sister Carol completed a first day double for Miss Paget, who also owns Jubilee Day and Jamaica Inn, so she began the new season well. She has a new jockey this season in T. H. Carey, who has been riding her ponies at Northolt Park. Not long ago any jockey who handed in his licence under Jockey Club Rules and took to the "ponies" was not allowed to return to real racing, but times have changed. There seemed to be no shortage of jockeys at Lincoln. As in the last war, several of those who are serving in one or other of the forces have accommodating commanding officers who give them a day's leave.

Gordon Richards rode the first winner of the first day, Snapdragon, from Templeman's stable, and, as the gelding started at 10 to 1, it made an excellent start to the season. He also rode the first and last winners on the second day.

The Brocklesby Winner

The standard of the Brocklesby two-year-olds was fairly good, even though the field consisted of only seven runners, instead of the more usual twenty to thirty. It was won by Lord Derby with Umballa, a son of the Blandford horse, Umidwar, out of Fara, a daughter of Pharlaris and Scapa Flow, and, therefore, sister to such celebrities as Fairway, Pharos and Fair Isle. Umballa is not a big colt—his dam was a smallish filly—but he is almost sure to win again, probably at Salisbury this week.

The racing at Salisbury should be several tones higher than at Lincoln, for this fixture comes in place of the usual Newbury Spring meeting, where the Greenham Plate used to introduce us to one or two of the classic colts. The Southern Plate at Salisbury takes the place of this, and distinction is likely to be given to it by the presence of Keystone—the Rosetta filly of last year—whom F. Darling hopes to run.

Keystone finished her first year with the distinction of being the best filly; for she had not been beaten, and she is reported to have done well and to be reasonably forward in condition. All that could be urged against her last year was that she was a little inclined to be restive and in her races to get off the true line. There is a very good acceptance for this Southern Plate, and, among the colts expected to do well against Keystone is Selim Hassan, a son of Hyperion. Sun Lore, who cost his present owner 5,000 gns. at the sale of the late Sir Abe Bailey's horses, has been taken out.

Chance for Prince Tetra

The Stewards' Handicap, which is a sort of substitute for the Newbury Cup, has had a good acceptance, headed by Black Speck and containing Quartier Maitre and several who ran at Lincoln. It will not, however, produce a field anything like Newbury Cup standard, and a good chance seems to be afforded to Prince Tetra, who missed the Lincolnshire Handicap for this. The only other racing of the week is at Ripon on Saturday.

I was reading the other day in an old and responsible weekly journal an article in which the writer discussed the shape racing is likely to take after this war, more especially on the financial side, and there was one opinion offered with which it is possible to agree in its entirety. He does not think that when there is peace again there will be the same rush of money into the bloodstock market as there was in the years 1919, 1920, etc., those halcyon days for nearly everyone connected with the Turf.

Family Fortunes Dwindling

He said that the great, even the gigantic, fortunes made by individuals in the years 1914-1918, are not being made in this war, and will not be made; and, further, that the large private fortunes that had been in the possession of several families for generations, were greatly whittled down in the last war, have been much reduced by subsequent taxation, particularly by death duties in the peace years, and are being still further reduced in this war. This latter part is too true.

Only the other day I noticed that the London mansions of two peers with ancient titles—one a great supporter of racing and breeding, and one who operates on a more limited scale—had house agents' boards displayed outside. The freehold of one was offered for sale, and the other can be had on lease. And these are two of the famous houses in London where in other days hospitality was dispensed on the magnificent scale. A small thing, perhaps; but significant.

I have been looking up the returns of the first post-war yearling sales held at Newmarket and Doncaster in 1919, and they are breath-taking. There were owners bidding and buying in countless thousands whose names were not only unknown to the general public, but, I should imagine, in several cases had never even been heard before by Mr. Tattersall himself. The newspaper headlines of the time were almost monotonous in their repetition of "astounding prices for yearlings"

Hectic Sale Days

"It," said a writer in the Blaadstock Breeders' Review, "some of the transactions recorded at the July Sales almost took our breath away, the proceedings at Doncaster in September startled us into a state of bewilderment. That there would be some sensational bidding was generally expected, but what we actually saw and heard had been unimaginable."

The 230 yearlings sold under the hammer made 225,425 guineas—an average of 971 guineas. Six colts and five fillies sold for 5,000 guineas and more. A new yearling record was created when Lord Glanely gave 11,500 guineas for a colt by Swynford. Sixteen yearlings from Sledmere made 61,300 guineas—average 3,831 guineas, and so the merry tune went on.

It is interesting to look now at the names of the men who laid out countless thousands on yearlings in those post-war days. Of those who were paying out great sums in 1919 only a very few are still racing and breeding on a considerable scale. Some are dead from natural causes, and some from unnatural causes. Some have had an inside view of the jail gates, and some are passing their old age on short commons. All this comedy and tragedy never will be enacted again in the bloodstock market on the same lines. This remark, by the way, should not be taken as a prediction that the market will be bad after the war. It may not be, for there will have to be a great deal of replenishment done, but it will not be on the lines of twenty years ago.

Motoring

A Trader on the Petrol Situation

By HAROLD C. BROWN

"LET'S get off petrol for a change. Shall we?" That is how I intended to start this week's Motor Notes, but I have received so many letters urging me to write some more about the iniquity of the Department of Supplies—as well as a few which have not been very flattering—that I must continue to be awkward.

I must first, however, clear away a misconception that seems to exist in the minds of people who apparently cannot read very well. I never at any time suggested that there was anything wrong with the using of petrol that had been stored in the good months. I did say, and I repeat, that the Government never advised the public to store petrol. I suggest that, apart from a few isolated cases of people who have denied themselves all motoring except on Sunday afternoons and special occasions, no stored petrol remains.

Are the cars that one sees in Dublin every night parked by the scores in the vicinity of picture houses being driven on stored petrol? If so, surely a man who went to the trouble of storing petrol so that he could drive into the pictures really needs the advice of a mental specialist.

A Garage Complaint

SPACE does not permit of my mentioning all the points made by my correspondents. I must quote, however, from one which I received from a highly respected member of the motor trade. I would love to give his first paragraph, but the Censor would object. He proceeds:—

"Can you blame the petrol dispensers forced out of business if, in their extremity, they decide to make the best of things and sell out their stock at the best price obtainable? The question of coupons does not trouble them, as they are going out of business. Then they have a reserve of coupons which, had they been remaining in trade, would have been handed over for fresh supplies. As they have been ruthlessly wiped out, are they to be blamed for exchanging these coupons for cash? I certainly would be slow to say they had done anything to be ashamed of.

"Then there is the case of a user of a commercial van who has also a private car. Is it a crime that he should spend his money on a town gas outfit which enables him to save a little spirit for use in his private car? I think not, and, indeed, look upon it as a little help to garages still struggling to keep their workers off the dole and themselves from ruin. If it is made a crime to run a private car, then the little work available will vanish and widespread unemployment will ensue."

They Would Not Lose

WHILE I do not agree with this correspondent's ideas, I am not prepared to criticise the garage proprietors. I have too many friends among them who are suffering from the effects of the petrol shortage, and they have my sympathy.

At the same time, let us be logical. If the petrol now being used for pleasure in private cars were, instead, being used for work by doctors and distributors of food, would the garages be any the worse off? The same amount of petrol would be sold, and the repairs necessary to the cars concerned would be the same. Where, then, would the garages lose?

I never will agree that it is right or reasonable that greyhounds should be taken down to their trials in motor cars while an old medical friend of mine is trudging up and down the hills of one of the most mountainous parts of Ireland because his eight gallons per month is sufficient for only about 150 miles in a district where top-gear seldom is engaged.

All the talk about stored petrol is a "red herring" to draw attention from the fact that petrol is being obtained by people who have no moral right to it. People who need petrol, who cannot use 'buses, are wasting their time in waxing indignant with me. I am on their side.

Club Notes

ARMY trials are being held in the North at present, and the finals will be contested on Sunday next. I have few destils, but apparently demonstrations by northern club men have been part of the programme each week-end. "The whole thing," writes a correspondent, "has been very satisfactory so far, and all those in authority are very pleased with the improvement in riding during each week-end."

The latest issue of the Ards Clubman tells of trials, dances and meetings, among the events to come being a sort of combined trial, picnic and grass track meeting on Easter Monday, with civilian competitors restricted to members of the promoting club. The Belfast and District, Knock and Ulster clubs are to hold an "amalgamated" dance and prize distribution one of these bright April days.

Apparently one of the barricades on the Comber-Newtownards road has been causing a little bother. Dickie McBride, of the Ards Club, awoke in hospital after a bump at the barricade, and found the next bed occupied by an Army motor cyclist who had injured himself at the same spot.

Joe Goes North

JOSEPH O'NEILL, secretary of the Southern Centre, M.C.U.I., and, among other things, our "star" chief flag marshal, has gone north, where he probably will remain till the motor trade returns to normal in the south.

D. O'B. Gill, father of two of our brightest young trials riders, and himself one of the best car trials men in 1940, is, I learn, to give a talk to the D. and D. boys. Mr. Gill, it seems, was associated with the great C. B. Franklyn, first Irishman to make his mark in the T.T. races. There should be a lot of material in reminiscences of Franklyn alone. He died five or six years ago. He had been a very big "noise" in the Indian Motor Cycle Company, U.S.A., since before the last war.

T. W. Murphy also is to give a further talk; A. Harrison is to speak on the T.T. Races, and there is a report that pressure will be brought on Billy Freeman, former D. and D. secretary, to induce him to tell of the old days.

Steam

IF waft is the diminutive of rage, controversy still wafts over the question of steam. There are many drivers, particularly among the older school, which had experience of the steam car and enjoyed it, who would like to see some determined effort made to establish steam power as an alternative to petrol in this country.

The big petrol companies, it is said, were responsible for the lack of advance in steam car design in the last thirty-five years, but the big petrol companies mean very little to us in Eire just now, and the Government should be ready to encourage—with concessions if not with cash—any attempt that was made to put steam cars on the road.

Younger engineers are not at all enthusiastic about the possibilities of steam, however.

CAMERON STILL DOUBTFUL

Side Waterford May Play To-morrow

The Waterford side to meet Shamrock Rovers in the Cup semi-final re-play to-morrow is not likely to be decided until the afternoon of the game, but there is a possibility that the side will be at full strength, Walsh, the left-half, has made a rapid recovery from a heavy cold, and his reappearance is said to be almost certain.

Creed's injury, received in Saturday's game, has not proved as serious as at first thought, but Cameron is still doubtful. The suggestion has been made that O'Regan, last season's bustling centre-forward, might be included at either inside forward positions. Assuming that the Management Committee find themselves in the same difficulty as Saturday, the following side is favoured as a sound proposition:—Daly; J. Hartery, Myers; O'Mahony, Phelan, M. Hartery; O'Driscoll, Coad, Johnstone, O'Regan, O'Keefe.

NO CHANGE IN NORTH REGIONAL TEAM

The Northern Regional League team for the match against League of Ireland at Belfast is the same as that chosen for the St. Patrick's Day match at Dublin, so that the only change on the team which actually played in that game is that Breen (Belfast Celtic), the original choice for goal-keeper, takes the place of Tierney, who came in as Breen's substitute at Dalymount Park.

BIG BELFAST HOLD-UP

ROBBERS ABANDON MONEY

From Our Correspondent.

BELFAST, Monday.

An armed raid by half-a-dozen men was made on the premises of Mr. Hugh McAlevey, bookmaker, at Berry street, Belfast, to-day. They took over £50, but had to abandon a suit case containing over £1,000 after the alarm had been raised.

One of Mr. McAlevey's clerks brought one of the men down by a flying tackle, but another man fired his revolver, and this enabled an accomplice to get away. A policeman who heard the shooting went to the scene from Chapel lane, but the men escaped in the side streets.

The raiders, who were apparently familiar with the premises, called about 10 o'clock and asked to see Mr. Thomas Nicholl, the manager, who was busy in his office on the first floor. When they were admitted, however, they drew their guns, announced that it was a hold-up, and that anybody who moved would be "plugged." Then, while three of the men mounted guard in the ground floor office, the other three went upstairs and burst into the manager's office, shouting, "This is a hold-up; get back against that wall and keep your hands up." Only Mr. Nicholl and his assistant, Mr. John McCartan, were in the room at the time, and they had no option but to obey. One of the men, carrying a large suit-case, then proceeded to ransack the place, and in a few minutes over £1,000, mostly in silver, had been stowed away. When the case was full the men took their departure, with a final warning to their captives not to budge.

The alarm was immediately raised by Mr. Nicholl, who thrust his fist through the office window and shouted to passers-by in the street, "Hold-Up." Mr. McCarton, at the same time, hurled an ink pot through the window, and several passers-by gave chase, and the man carrying the suit case full of money dropped it. All the raiders were youths.

(BEFORE MR. M. HANNAN, SENIOR DISTRICT JUSTICE.)

Mary Sonnax, of Railway avenue, Inchicore, who Mr. H. McCracken (solicitor, representing the Dublin United Tramways Company) said was known as "the terror of Inchicore," was fined 20s. for failing to pay her fare on a D.U.T.C. omnibus on January 24th last.

Conductors, said Mr. McCracken, had considerable trouble with this woman. The defendant told the Court that she always paid her fare when she had it. If she did not pay the conductor, she paid when the company sent her the bill.

RETURN OF SHARES

(BEFORE MR. JUSTICE GAVAN DUFFY.)

An order was made for the return to Andrew O'Shaughnessy, woollen manufacturer, Ardilea, Dundrum, Co. Dublin, of 100 Munster and Leinster Bank shares, which, it was stated, were held by the Munster and Leinster Bank at their Cork office for sale at the disposal of J. C. Forde and Co., stockbrokers, South Mall, Cork.

The bank suggested that for their protection an order should be made, it was stated.

Mr. J. A. Costello, K.C., who with Mr. Ashley Powell (instructed by Messrs. D. D. MacDonald and Co.) appeared for Mr. O'Shaughnessy, said that that there had been an interim injunction granted restraining the bank from parting with certificates for 115 shares, which they had held at the disposal of J. C. Forde and Co. for sale. Dermot Forde-Nagle, trading as J. C. Forde and Co., was now bankrupt, and the present order was sought in respect of certificates relating to 100 shares.

Mr. Sean Collins (instructed by Messrs. Edward F. Neville and Co.) appeared for the Official Assignee.

REVISION OF ELECTORS' LISTS

Seamus O Conchubhair, Registration Officer, opened a revision of the electors' lists for the City of Dublin for the year 1941 in the Grand Jury Room, Green Street Courthouse, yesterday.

Mr. J. J. Rowe, who represented the City Manager (Deputy Registration Officer), reported that he had checked 283,480 names on the existing register. Newly qualified electors entered totalled 59,967, while 55,602 were deleted as being no longer qualified, and 5,100 were transferred from Division 1 to Division 3.

A VOLUNTEER'S PENSION

A MATTER FOR RECONSIDERATION

(BEFORE MR. JUSTICE GAVAN DUFFY.)

Reserved judgment was given in the action of Joseph O'Doherty, barrister-at-law and former T.D., "Derryana," Church road, Balbriggan, against the Attorney-General, and Thomas O'Donnell, K.C., 27 Raglan road, Dublin, the referee appointed under the Military Service Pension Act, 1934, claiming a declaration that, by reason of his service as a member of the Irish Volunteer Executive from March, 1917, to October, 1921, he is a person to whom the Military Service Pensions Act, 1934, applies.

Mr. Justice Gavan Duffy said that, in his judgment, the Referee had gone wrong in that case; a notice sent by him to Mr. O'Doherty demonstrated that he had not addressed his mind to the question whether at the critical times Mr. O'Doherty served as a member of the Executive of the Irish Volunteers, and that he did not propose to do so. His notice demonstrated that he proposed to report against the plaintiff without examining that important part of his claim at all. The notice told the plaintiff that he might furnish further evidence and representations, which he had done, but, in face of the basic error as to the purposes of the Referee's investigation, the plaintiff had properly determined to seek relief in the High Court. In his view, however, the plaintiff should have taken the course of applying for an order of mandamus at less expense and with more expedition than that action had involved.

He would not make any order in the present action, beyond giving liberty to re-open the matter if counsel for the plaintiff, after consideration, wished to do so immediately after the Easter Vacation. The reason was that it would be most unsatisfactory to dispose finally of the case upon an issue which had not been argued, if it was arguable. He would gladly re-consider the matter if he were satisfied that mandamus did not lie, on some ground not preventing a declaration, or even that there were a serious doubt about its availability. The order would not be drawn up until May 1, or until further hearing, if a further hearing were asked for in the meantime.

Having heard arguments on both sides upon the construction of the Act of 1934 and its relation to the Referee's inquiry, he thought it right to give his opinion upon that matter in the hope of saving further expense to the parties. The action, though expensive, would not have been in vain if the Attorney-General saw fit to advise that the litigation should end, and if the Referee were willing to notify the plaintiff that he would take up the investigation anew on the lines indicated by him.

Mr. Lavery, K.C., Mr. P. Roe, K.C., and Mr. Michael Sweeney (instructed by Mr. G. L. MacGowan), appeared for Mr. O'Doherty; and Mr. Kevin Dixon, K.C., and Mr. C. O'Daly (instructed by the Chief State Solicitor), for the Attorney-General and Mr. O'Donnell.

COTTON FUTURES MARKET CLOSED

Members of the Liverpool Cotton Association yesterday cheered, as they said "Au revoir" to the Futures Market, which, for over 100 years, has regulated cotton prices throughout the world.

The market closed yesterday "for the duration" because of the British Government's decision to control raw cotton.

POSITION OF IRISH BOOKS

DEBATE AT P.E.N. CLUB CONVERSAZIONE

There was a large attendance at the conversazione and discussion held by Irish P.E.N. (Dublin Centre) at Jury's Hotel on Saturday last. The subject for debate was "Authors, Books and Booksellers," and Mr. Austin Clarke, President of Irish P.E.N., was in the chair. Publishers' representatives, librarians, and members of the Book Fair Committee were present, and the great success of the recent Book Fair gave zest to a practical discussion.

Professor H. O. White, Chairman of the Book Fair Committee, paid a tribute to the work of those who had organised the undertaking.

Miss Roisin Walsh, who opened the discussion, pointed out that Irish books suffer from undue competition in the book trade, and do not get a fair chance. She stressed the need for actual production and publication of Irish books in this country. In normal times, Irish books by Irish authors, actually printed and published in Ireland, would have a special appeal as native products to readers in other countries.

Mrs. Sheehy Skeffington said that, as a whole, Irish authors were too retiring. There was a great lack of popular reprints and cheap editions of Irish books. In this way Irish authors suffered from a handicap.

Mr. Lyon (the Talbot Press) hoped that the interest aroused by the Book Fair might not be transitory. Irish books were outnumbered by books from other countries, and needed special encouragement. He thought that the lectures by well known Irish authors had proved the chief attraction at the Mansion House. Mr. Terence Trench (The Three Candle Press) hoped that the Book Fair would be an annual event, and gave many practical suggestions. He suggested a larger display of out-of-print books and items of literary and historic interest. Mr. Geoffrey White suggested that authors might be present at the next Book Fair and autograph copies of their books purchased at the stalls. Among others who spoke were:—Miss Rosamund Jacobs, Mrs. Blanad Salkeld (The Gayfield Press), Mrs. Hilda Nolan (Browne and Nolan), Mrs. Morgan, Miss Kathleen O'Brennan, Mr. Denis Ireland, Mr. MacDonald Douglas and Mr. Frank Hugh O'Donnell.

MURDER CHARGE APPEAL

(BEFORE THE CHIEF JUSTICE, THE PRESIDENT OF THE HIGH COURT, AND MR. JUSTICE HANNA.)

The hearing of the application of Henry Gleeson, Marlhill, New Inn, Co. Tipperary, for leave to appeal from his conviction of the murder of Mary McCarthy, of the same townland, on November 20 or 21 last, was opened and adjourned until to-day.

Mr. Nolan Whelan, K.C., and Mr. Sean McBride (instructed by Mr. John J. Timoney) appeared for Gleeson; and Mr. J. A. McCarthy, K.C., and Mr. G. D. Murnaghan (instructed by the Chief State Solicitor) for the Attorney-General.

The grounds of the application were, amongst others, that the trial judge's charge to the jury was incomplete and unbalanced; that evidence had been wrongly admitted, that the evidence was insufficient to support the verdict, that the trial had been unsatisfactory, and that there had been a miscarriage of justice.

The opening of the application by Mr. Nolan Whelan had not concluded when the court rose.

Of Interest to Women

SPRING ACCESSORIES

THIS year, by its very leanness, will probably be one of the most interesting in the history of female smartness. We shall receive some surprises, too; for people whom we formerly used to admire for their chic and up-to-date turn-outs will prove to have been nothing but tailors' dummies, utterly dependent upon their advisers and unstinted supplies of new garments and accessories for their pleasing appearance; while others, maybe some whom we never noticed very much before, will prove to be the women who were made for this occasion, and whose constructive ingenuity can rise above all the restrictions, which are becoming more severe each day.

PLAIN CLOTHES

The woman who is going to make or retain a reputation for a fashionable appearance in 1941 is she whose own natural flair tells how to make best use of old and familiar things, and how to place small innovations so that they will be of the best possible advantage to the whole picture. From this I dare to prophesy a new art will develop, the art of improvisation, and its development will be a fascinating and absorbing pursuit for all those who are not too lazy or unenterprising to give serious consideration to a matter of such vital personal interest.

Clothes will be of the plainest, both in colours and design, and will tend merely to be canvas upon which the picture is to be painted.

HANDBAGS

The makers of accessories have certainly played their part well; for the choice and variety are large, indeed, in all the categories of items which contribute to the final ensemble. Unusual associations of matching sets will be chosen by many as the high-light of this year's toilette, and here, again, many leads are given by the shops. A matched set, consisting of handbag, gloves and shoes, all carried out, say, in a Burgundy suede, will with clever use contribute largely to a striking and pleasing turn-out, and the association of these three accessories will undoubtedly appeal to many women.

SHOES

Generally speaking, shoes are practical and hard-wearing this year, but I cannot remember when they have been more interesting or attractive. Their flat, wide heels make them very comfortable for walking, and the various coloured leathers, often with bright, contrasting laces, bring them into line for more sedate occasions. The shoes with thick, coloured crêpe soles are the rage at present, and are perfect examples of the many purpose accessories. The colours are often so bright, however, that the greatest care has to be taken that the shoes do not quarrel with any other part of the ensemble. I have seen several mortal battles lately. An extension of the coloured sole fashion is shown in the shoes, whose coloured soles have brass studs in the sides.

Collars, cuffs and bows in matching sets are coming right to the forefront, and their importance need not be stressed. These sets form a very cheap accessory, and their price is out of all proportion to their effect. Some women have the art—and it is an art—of choosing just the right collar, cuffs and bow for the dress of the day, and a happy choice can make last year's frock look like a suggestion from the latest creation of a fashion journal. Though the sets are, as a rule, in linen, they are sometimes carried out in felt in contrasting shades, and this material provides a very welcome variation.

FANCY JEWELLERY

With the increased importance of accessories fancy jewellery comes right into the foreground. Gold beads and sequins are greatly in demand for "dressy" occasions, and small enamel figures can greatly improve a hat or dark-coloured dress. Gilt animals as buttons or buckles give that touch of originality which must never be lacking in the truly fashionable woman.

THIS WEEK'S RECIPE

CARROTS CONSERVATIVE

1 bundle new carrots, seasoning, chopped parsley, 1 oz. butter, 3 tablespoonsful water.

Wash and scrape carrots. Cut in half lengthwise. Place in a lined or very thick stew pan with seasoning, butter and water. Place on a tight-fitting lid and simmer slowly for twenty minutes. Shake frequently to prevent the carrots sticking to the pan. When they are tender, remove the lid and cook with the lid off for a few minutes until the liquid evaporates. Have ready some chopped parsley, sprinkle this over the carrots, toss and serve at once.

New carrots boiled in a little salted water until tender are delicious served with this.

Parsley Sauce.

1 oz. butter, seasoning, 1 teacupful of water, 1 oz. flour, chopped parsley, 2 tablespoonsful unsweetened condensed milk.

Melt the butter in a saucepan, add flour, seasoning and condensed milk, and mix to a paste. Gradually add the water, keeping the mixture smooth. Stir over a medium flame until the mixture thickens. Add a little more water if necessary. Just before serving stir in a generous portion of chopped parsley.

PRODUCTION OF TURF

BURNALTY BOG EXPERIMENT

An experimental working of Burnalty Bog, Glencullen, will be carried out within a few days by Mr. J. A. Ryan, Dublin County Surveyor, to ascertain the possibility of developing turf production.

There are 700 acres of bog at Burnalty, and the opinion was expressed at a Council meeting last night that its proximity to Dun Laoghaire would make its development a commercial proposition.

It was stated that a preliminary cutting was being carried out by local people, and that if, when inspected by representatives of the Council, it was found to be satisfactory, the Council would encourage its working on a large scale in every way possible.

It was noted at the meeting that authorisation had been sent by the Department of Local Government for Mr. J. M. Martin, Local Government Auditor, to hold an extraordinary audit of the accounts of the Council.

The Council approved of the raising by the Dublin Board of Public Health of a loan of £119,150 for the purchase of over 90 acres of land in the administrative area, and for erection on it of 241 cottages in connection with the Board's agreement schemes, 1937 and 1939, under the Labourers Acts.

NO SUCH PERSON AS THE AVERAGE BOY

Bad writing was a sign of neglect at school, not genius; a bad speller could not eradicate a natural weakness, but he could disguise it. There was no such person as the "average boy." These points were made by Mr. A. H. Sparkhall Brown, B.Sc., when he spoke about some failings of secondary education before the Dublin Rotary Club yesterday.

Mr. Brown said that he did not try to argue that the secondary school curriculum should be confined to subjects of purely practical value, but he thought that students from the secondary schools should be proficient in the plain practical subjects, whatever other attainments they might have to their credit. One of the things that struck him most about leaving certificate boys was that they knew so much and at the same time so little. There was something wrong if a boy left school with a knowledge of co-ordinate geometry and the calculus and yet could not work out a simple problem in discount or profit and loss and even add a column of figures correctly. There was something wrong if he could write a critical appreciation of a great writer, yet could not express his own thoughts in simple concise phrases.

Let us teach subjects of cultural value, subjects giving the broadest and fullest type of education, but let us at the same time make sure that we are giving a practical training, such as will enable a boy to deal with the tasks which will confront him when he sets out to make a career for himself.

Mr. G. T. Clampett, proposing a vote of thanks, said that examinations should not be considered the be all and end all of education. Business men were inclined to suffer from the examination complex.

Mr. A. Pearson (Chairman) presided.

HORSE DESTROYED

(BEFORE MR. JUSTICE MARTIN MAGUIRE.)

The Court reduced to £188 a decree which had been granted in the Dublin Circuit Court for £208 in favour of Robert H. Usher, Meadowbank, Bushy Park road, Dublin, in an action against Kelso Laundry, Rathmines road, Dublin. It was stated that a gelding which was being led on a rein beside a mare ridden by a groom of plaintiff's on February 14, 1940, took fright at a horse-drawn van, the property of defendants, on the Dodder road and broke away, colliding with a stone wall. As a result of the injuries it suffered it had to be destroyed.

Mr. Frank FitzGibbon, K.C., and Mr. E. C. Micks (instructed by Messrs. Barrington and Son) appeared for plaintiff; and Mr. G. C. Cullinan, K.C., and Mr. Ernest M. Wood (instructed by Messrs. Milward Jones, Mayne and Sharpe) for defendants.

Plaintiff was allowed costs in both Courts.

THEATRE ROYAL

A BRIGHT SHOW

The vaudeville programme at the Royal is well arranged and has plenty of life in it. Jimmy Campbell and the Orchestra put on some pleasant numbers, and there is some good singing and piano-playing by Muriel Gill. The Three Hillbilly Boys sing a few cowboy songs, to the accompaniment of a guitar, a piano-accordeon and the organ—an unusual, but effective, combination. Jock Elmore and Renee add some light comedy and a "dash of Scotch" to the programme. Johnny Polo puts in some skilful work on a vertical pole, two presentations by the Twelve Royal Violettes (including a spirited Russian number), and an organ recital by Alban Chambers round off an entertaining bill.

The film is "A Date with Destiny," featuring Basil Rathbone.

"THE COMET"

A talk on "The Comet," the first successful Sunday newspaper published in Dublin, was given by Mr. B. P. Bowen at a meeting of the Bibliographical Society of Ireland, held in the Royal Irish Academy yesterday,

Mr Bowen said that the paper was first published in 1831 by the Comet Club, previously known as the Political Tract Society, and as such responsible for the Parson's Hornbook. Some of the members of the club were Cornelius O'Callaghan, Samuel Lover, Maurice O'Connell, Clarence Mangan and Joseph Lestrange. The paper ceased publication in December, 1833, after its 136th issue.

Francis O'Kelley spoke on some of the Comet Club members.

Dr. Hayes described some recent acquisitions by the National Library, including a manuscript translation of "Geraldus Cambrensis," by Rd. Robinson, dated 1575, which was earlier than the printed copy, and relics from the Edgeworth family manuscript poems, dated 1819, and never printed; an account book and diary kept in several volumes.

Those present included:—Mr. Farrington (vice-president), Dr. T. P. C. Kirkpatrick, the Rev. P. Brady, Seumas O'Cassidy, the Rev. Father Ryan, Miss Elmes, Mrs. Hornsby, Mr. M. Butler, Dr. Burke, Mr. O'Kelley, Mrs. Vere Hunt, hon. secretary.
